

Yellin' Out!

Do you think the neon on the dorms was appropriate for a college environment?

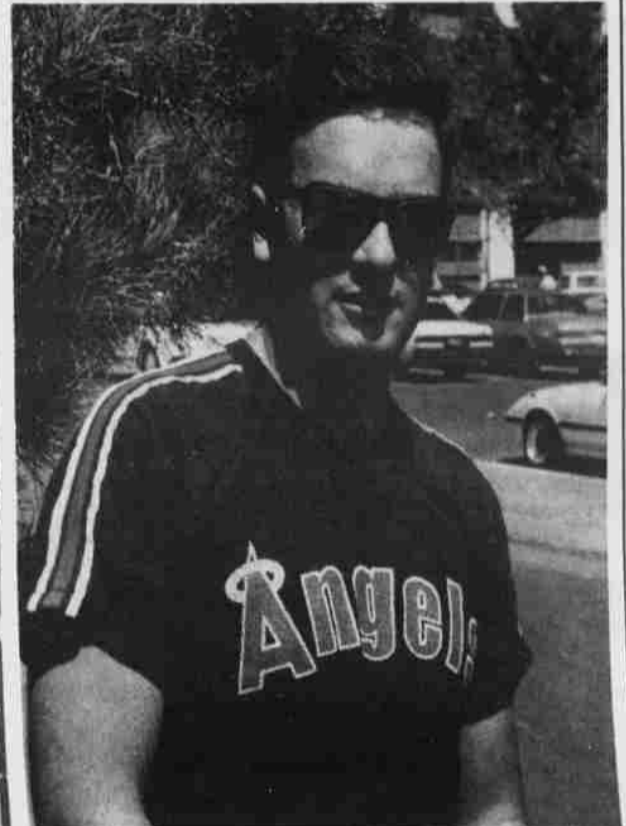

I thought they were really modern. I don't think there was anything wrong with them.

Hotel Major

No, not really. They should have been thinking about getting the inside done instead of worrying about the outside.

Kevin Donnelly, 19
Hotel Major

Not really, it doesn't look like it belongs on a campus. It looks dumb

College tuition costs rise nationally

According to the NACS weekly bulletin, tuition is going up again. At colleges and universities throughout the country, the average rise in tuition charges this fall will be seven percent. For the eighth consecutive year, this increase will be considerably higher than the average yearly rate of inflation, which, as measured by the Consumer Price Index for the 12-month period ending in June, was four percent.

Based on the College Board's annual survey of college costs, average tuition in each of the major institutional categories will be:

—Students at four-year public colleges and universities will pay an average of $1,566 for tuition and fees, an increase of five percent over last year.

—Students at two-year public colleges will pay an average of $767, up four percent.

—Students at four-year private institutions will pay an average of $7,693, up nine percent.

—Students at two-year private colleges will pay an average of $4,564 up seven percent.

—Students at all institutions, regardless of type, will pay an average of $1,550 for books, supplies, transportation, and personal expenses.
