

OPINION/EDITORIAL

From the gutter

Did you know that drunk college students are not allowed into the Jerry Lewis Telethon? Well I didn't either, but this weekend I found this fact out first hand.

Sunday night we were sitting around with nothing to do so we came up with the idea of going to the telethon. What a brilliant idea, we could go stand in a line for three hours outdoors with nothing to do but stand. That sounded about as exciting as getting poked in the eye with a sharp stick. So someone came up with the idea of taking along some beer. Now that sounded fun, we could stand in line and play a popular manure game and have a good time while waiting to see Jerry.

It took about a half hour to get everyone organized and into two cars (eight people in a VW Rabbit) and Mitch on his motor scooter, which was exciting enough to keep all amused. When we arrived at Ceasars we chatted with the security guard that was standing at the first tent. For those of you who are not familiar with the Telethon, the line is a series of three tents that are set up in back of Ceasars. We tried every way possible to get the guard to let us in the line at the second tent but nothing got by this rent-a-cop. He didn't even fold when we offered him a six pack.

By the time we got to the second tent the twelve of us had gone through about a case and a half and we were getting a little loud. At this point we were in line to get into the second tent, which was equipped with television monitors so you could watch the telethon. We were standing there when another security guard told us that we could be as loud as we wanted as long as we were not in the tent but when we moved into the tent we had to be quiet. So we went on playing the manure game for another thirty minutes enjoying our freedom while we were still outside. About three minutes before the line started to move again a third security guard who looked alot like Dick Tracy came up and told us that we all had to leave.

"You are all drunk and rowdy and that is not the kind of a crowd that we want in the telethon."

Oh gee! Here we were just told that we could be as loud as we wanted but you don't want us in your telethon. That made little sense. Well actually it does now but it didn't after we had a few to drink. After a small argument we decided that their telethon was not good enough for us anyway and we all loaded into the cars and returned home.

So next year if you plan on turning a boring event into an exciting beer game just be warned that Jerry does not like drunk college students at their telethon.

QUESTION: What do Ronald Reagan, John Wayne, Carroll O'Connor, Terry Bradshaw and Phil Simms have in common?

ANSWER: They're all alumni of Greek Fraternities.
