

ROTC students attend camp

by silka neal

staff writer

Students in the Army ROTC Program at UNLV recently attended Advanced Camp '88 at Fort Lewis, Washington. Advanced Camp is designed for ROTC cadets to receive proper training to become captains.

The cadets were graded in training events such as the Army Physical Fitness Test and Platoon Ratings. UNLV's average in these events were above the camp average. Among the other California and Nevada universities and colleges UNLV was the top performing unit.

Contrary to a popular rumor UNLV's Army ROTC Program is in no danger of being cancelled. LTC Sheldon Wintermute, Chairman of the Department of Military Science states that the ROTC program will be "here to stay" as long as it maintains to attract interested students.

YELLIN' OUT!

What should UNLV do about overcrowding?

Make enrollment harder.

Joon Shim, 24
Hotel Major

I think they should build one of those parking terminals for the parking problem.

Ann Potenza, 21
Communications Major

Exterminate at least 1,500 people using generated random numbers.

Marcus T. Biondi, 21
Biology Major

College enrollment rises

Despite the gloom and doom forecasts of demographers, enrollment at the majority of colleges and universities will be on the rise for the eighth year in a row.

The sharp decreases in enrollment, widely expected by demographers pointing to the nation's shrinking supply of 18-year olds, haven't happened yet. Increased enrollment of older, non-traditional students and a higher percentage of high school students who opt for college has and will continue to offset potential shortages into the early '90s. If trends continue as expected, 54 percent of higher-education institutions will experience an increase in enrollment, one-third can expect an increase of at least 10 percent, and most schools will raise the number of first-time freshmen arriving this fall. In addition, more than half of colleges and universities have hired additional faculty in the past year.

UNLV's population grows

Enrollment at UNLV increased by 1,080 students for Fall Semester 1988, President Robert C. Maxson said.

Preliminary, unofficial figures from the Registrar's Office indicate UNLV has shattered its previous enrollment record by increasing 7.8 percent to 14,858. Enrollment a year ago was 13,778, a record at that time.

Maxson said. "And our student body continues to get better as it gets bigger. It appears that many of our new students from all over Nevada were at the top of their high school graduating classes." "This increase represents a wonderful vote of confidence in our academic programs,"

Take Something Home
Besides A Degree
And An Education

Write For The Yellin' Rebel

Call 739-3478 For More Information
Or Stop By Our Offices On the Third Floor
Of The Student Union