Fan Frenzy—Proxy Sharks!

I showed up at Tarkanian's Celebrity Sports Pub for the second half of the UNLV-Georgia Tech game on Saturday night (March 31) expecting a festive mood, at least.

Everybody in Tark's Pub was seized by Rebel Fever. Associating one's self with a hometown team of winners gone national is a fun proposition. Everybody in the pub, students and non-students alike took part in the joy of vicariously being one of Tark's Sharks.

The fury of that mass assemblage was both infectious and innocuous. Any old Joe Blow who chanced upon Tark's Pub couldn't help actively participating in the crowd's frenzy.

The beer was flowing, and so was the emotion and excitement of Rebel Basketball.

I got drenched with beer as the fans sprayed the place in the closing seconds of the game. A fight broke out! Some lady kept unfastening my suspenders from behind! Such times are rare, few, and far-in-between.

...the frenzy of the fans!

helicopter to Fallon, where the training will begin.

The ROTC cadets will be the "aggressors" in the exercise, which is designed to test the National Guard's aviation equipment and skills. They will capture a mock village and defend it from Navy, Air Force and National Guard units, which will try to capture a simulated nuclear weapon.

"It is a unique event for the university and it shows that we are actually out doing and accomplishing things," said Lt. Col. Michael Dunegan, director of UNLV's Army ROTC program.

On April 7, the cadets will fly to Dog Valley, west of Reno, for additional training, which will include patrolling and tactical field training. They will return to Las Vegas on April 10.

"These exercises will provide practical training, especially for the juniors in the program, who will go on the advanced camp at Fort Lewis this summer," said Capt. John Beck, company commander.

"Their scores in the camp will determine their assignments upon going active after graduating from UNLV," he said.

manities buildings from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

"It takes place twice a year." Kathy Wilson of the Job Development Center said. "Once in the fall, then again in the spring."

According to Wilson, over 36 companies plan to participate in this spring's fair. Among them are Citibank, T.G.I. Friday's, The Frontier Girl Scout Council, UPS, the Nevada Power District, and Ole's.

Although most of the companies will be looking for full-time summer employment, some will also offer students a part-time position during the school year.

Wilson also points out that this spring's fair will also have spots available for students with disabilities.

"It's open to all students." Wilson said.

Kathie Miller is one UNLV student who hopes to gain summer employment from the job fair.

"Since I won't be going home this summer, a job will come in handy."

Over the past, between 800 and 1000 students have participated in the job fairs and according to Wilson, only about 20 to 25 usually end up getting hired.

clude writing opinions in the local media, speaking at local elementary schools and making a concerted effort to raise the sensitivity level of the public to the fact that student-athletes must be students first.

Our theme this year is "What are you going to do with the rest of your life." This pertains to the fact that one in 100 high school athletes play Division I college sports and only one in 10,000 high school student-athletes may play professional sports - and those who "make it" can expect a professional career of less than four years.

There will be an assembly at Doris French Elementary School at 3235 East Hacienda Ave., at 10:30 a.m. to encourage children to "Play Smart."

The UNLV Athletes will give key chains, posters, Rebel cups, towels and more to the students. The cheerleaders will do a cheer, the athletes will speak and there will be a surprise visit from the Rebel mascot.
