

Lecture on energy and water conservation

American physicist and energy consultant Amory Lovins will lecture on "Energy and Water Conservation: What We Can Do" on May 4, 7 p.m., in UNLV's John S. Wright Hall auditorium Room 103.

Lovins and his wife, Hunter, have worked together studying energy problems and solutions for more than 10 years, and they have published a dozen books and hundreds of papers on energy conservation.

Lovins served on the Department of Energy's senior advisory board from 1980 to 1981, and he was elected a Fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in 1984 for his book "Soft Energy Paths" and his other contributions to energy policy.

In 1989, Lovins was the first recipient of the Onassis Foundation's Delphi Prize, one of the world's top environmental awards, for his research to find alternative solutions to energy problems. Amory and Hunter Lovins share a 1982 Mitchell Prize for their work on utility policy and a 1983 Right Livelihood Award, also known as the "alternative Nobel Prize."

The couple founded the Rocky Mountain Institute (RMI) in 1982. The institute's staff explores the links between energy, water, agriculture, security, and economic development. More than 1000 utilities and related organizations in 20 countries subscribe to RMI's "Competitor" update service, which provides current and detailed information about new methods to save electricity.

Lovins' lecture is sponsored by UNLV's Honors Program, College of Science and Mathematics, and College of Engineering and the Desert Research Institute. For more information, contact Jeff Van Ee at 798-2367.
