First National Young Feminist Conference

History will be made this Feb. 1 to 3 as young activists from coast-to-coast gather in Ohio at the first National Young Feminist Conference. Sponsored by the National Organization for Women, the Young Feminist Conference has been called to educate, organize and inspire emerging leadership of the women's movement.

Feminist leaders Molly Yard and Gloria Steinem will deliver keynote speeches. Workshops will be offered on a broad range of feminist topics, including reproductive rights, violence against women, eco-feminism, women in sports, civil rights, and sexism in the media.

The conference is open to both women and men. Registration is $25, which includes one year free membership in NOW. In order to ensure diversity, a number of scholarships are available to cover transportation and housing costs. The conference will be held at the Quaker Square Hilton in Akron, Ohio.

Contact NOW for registration, child care, discount travel and hotel arrangements: National Organization for Women, 1000 16th Street NW, Washington, D.C. 20036, or call (202) 331-0066.
