

New program introduced on Health Awareness Day

A new BACCHUS program will be introduced to UNLV during Health Awareness Day on Wednesday.

BACCHUS, which stands for Boosting Alcohol Consciousness Concerning Health of University Students, is the new alcohol education program on UNLV's campus.

"There is quite a bit of alcohol abuse on this campus," said Raymond Rodriguez, health educator for the Student Health Center. "We just want to boost the awareness of its presence."

BACCHUS is a national program with more than 425 chapters across the country. According to Rodriguez, many universities don't have alcohol awareness programs, but UNLV is trying to be part of the educational leadership involved with student life.

The program focuses on students and educators working together to solve the problem of alcoholism on campus.

"Education, especially about behavior, is usually much better accepted from peers, not professionals," Rodriguez said. "The impact is greater when educators and students share a common bond."

The two major roles of the program are to educate the students on issues concerning alcohol and to bring a positive behavioral change in attitudes toward drinking in moderation. The aim of the program is not to discourage drinking, but to make students aware of how much and why they are drinking.

According to Rodriguez, a number of students have expressed an interest in establishing a chapter at UNLV.

"BACCHUS is a voluntary program open to all students who are interested," Rodriguez said.

A BACCHUS display presented on Health Awareness Day, Wednesday, April 3, from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Moyer Student Union Ballroom will provide more information.
