MOYER STUDENT UNION BOARD

I took Joyce seriously

by William Holt

Once in a great while, there is an occurrence in nature that defies previously measured laws. We have such a random event on animated display in the offices of MSU 120. It is called Joyce Garcia, otherwise known as CSUN secretary.

While Joyce does act as a secretary, she also poses as a mutated entity with power. She is only supposed to serve those who have been elected into power, namely Student Body President Joe Bunin, but has somehow managed to do more than that, taking on the characteristic of holding an office as a secretary.

I and other observers have conducted studies to see how this secretary reached her present status. Disregarding whatever goes on in the MSU 120 offices that Joyce inhabits, let us examine Joyce as an isolated event.

Joyce seems to actually have control over many CSUN functions, including the newspaper that is still under CSUN direction.

We must now consider what would entail a secretary having the component of power. Supposedly, he or she is a channel through which those in power operate. This becomes a false statement when the secretary begins to show signs of creating policy and making decisions formerly known to be conducted by an officer (not to mention the inevitable awareness that a president would most likely have for such an event to be allowed).

Joyce helped to create the famous "Reverse Raise" policy by decreasing the salaries of CSUN employees without notice or reason. She helped to create the "Voluntary Workmanship" agenda by forcing those who choose to work for CSUN go unpaid. She did this by conveniently losing and forgetting about the necessary "pay" documents, and by using perpetual postponement. (Note: these methods are closely imitative of systems used by those actually in power.)

One must not forget that it was Joyce who informed The Yellin' Rebel employees that the back-pay awarded to them by the Judicial Council would only cover a period of two weeks. She named two J.C. justices who she claimed had given her the information.

However, when questioned, one of the justices said he hadn't told her that. Thankfully, the Chief Justice called to give her the correct information, of which Joyce responded to with less than a smile.

Joyce has the privileged capacity to control all of the important communication between CSUN and the rest of the world (which makes you wonder what Bunin does).

Joyce is very functional and helpful when asked by a student about matters not related to CSUN operation. But the opposite is true otherwise. Recently, a controversial editor named Bonar Tucker requested a simple application sheet to remain editor as requested by the Publications Board and found that Joyce's "Run-Around" policy caused her to leave empty handed. In the meantime, arbitrary deadlines for these applications "fly from Joyce's desk, daily."

We do not know exactly what CSUN does (unless it does nothing and they're all just trying to cover it up), but we do know that something is up when the senate unanimously approves $12,000 in a matter of minutes while other employees go for months unpaid and a character like Joyce has turned the secretary position into a secret governmental shield. This is my hypothesis about our Joyce downstairs, and not a fact:

"If you happen to inquire into CSUN matters, you will bounce off her and be misdirected, misinformed, inconvenienced and uncompensated all over the place."

While still being what other people think she is, she is also the CSUN "Governmental Shield" (CSUNGS). When the newspaper recently sent a reporter down to the courtyard of MSU to photograph the litter after the SpringFest clean up crew had not arrived, Joyce came flying out of her office telling the reporter to leave. "There's no story here," she said, putting her protective shield to work.

If you happen to inquire into CSUN matters, you will bounce off her and be misdirected, misinformed, inconvenienced and uncompensated all over the place.

If you want to talk to MSU 120, please do not tell 'em Will sent you.

Holt is a freshman and seems determined to anger everyone he has ever met.
