

Columbia River wealth dispersed worldwide

Since early in this century, the number of salmon in the Columbia River has plummeted 85 percent, from 16 million to 2.5 million. Of the 2.5 million, an estimated 300,000 are salmon from wild strains; the rest were spawned in hatcheries.

■ Commercial and sport fisheries on the Columbia and the Snake are estimated to be a $133 million-a-year industry.

■ The Columbia River is the second-largest navigational transportation system in the U.S., after the Mississippi River.

■ Sixty-six million tons of cargo were moved on the Columbia and Snake rivers in 1989.

■ The Columbia carries a quarter-million cubic feet of water per second to the ocean — enough for every drought-stricken Californian (there are 30 million of them) to drink a glass of water every second.

■ Columbia River dams generate enough power to keep 16 Seattles lit all year-round. Electricity from the hydrosystem lights homes and powers factories as far away as Los Angeles and Salt Lake City.

■ Columbia River hydropower helps produce 43 percent of the U.S. aluminum supply, roughly 2 million tons a year. The industry employs about 10,000 people, supplying companies such as Boeing, the world's largest builder of commercial airliners.

■ Wheat from irrigated lands is used in Japan, Korea, Taiwan and other Asian countries to make noodles, bread, fortune cookies and other food products.

■ The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers barges more than 20 million smolts (juvenile salmon) around the dams each year.

■ More than $5 billion worth of crops are produced on 8 million irrigated acres — a desert area roughly twice the size of Kuwait.
