McDonald's trash elimination plan

The plan, developed with the Environmental Defense Fund, may eliminate 80 percent of the 2 million pounds of trash a day McDonald's produces at its 8,500 restaurants in the U.S. Some highlights of the plan include:

Eliminating individual packaging for cutlery except where required by law

Using smaller napkins to reduce paper waste

Testing pump-style condiment dispensers instead of individual packets

Testing elimination of lids for cold drinks for customers eating in.

Using unbleached, recycled paper carry-out bags

Other points

- Testing reusable coffee filters.
- Testing reusable salad lids.
- Replacing corrugated boxes used to ship meat with reusable containers.
- Conducting tests to see if composting organic and paper waste is feasible.

Using paper bags for medium and large fries instead of paperboard containers
