

Students give blood to save lives

by Kelly Hansen

United Blood Services surpassed their blood drive goal of 35 units Thursday at UNLV, driving away with 48.

This is a non-profit organization that is the sole provider of blood to all the hospitals in Nevada. They service 16 area hospitals with 130 to 140 units of blood a day.

The United Blood Services van comes to UNLV twice a month from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. They are coordinated with student health services and are sponsored by different UNLV organizations each time they come.

"The whole process takes about 40 minutes," said Patty Kuepper, United Blood Services Community Relations Representative. "The students fill out a questionnaire about their lifestyle, then their blood is drawn and taken back to a lab where it is tested for HIV, syphilis and hepatitis. If there is a problem the results will be sent to the student by mail."

United Blood Services will be back to UNLV on Nov. 20 from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., outside Beam Hall and again on Nov. 26, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in Room 201 of the student union. A UNLV student group will be giving out special thank-you gifts to donors.

more important than any person here," Finfrock said.

The resignation comes as a surprise. Maxson said that Finfrock had fared very well in the search committee's selection process. Now Maxson will take the two other names suggested by the committee to choose the new athletic director.

"I hope to have a decision for the Board (of Regents meeting) on December 5 and 6. If I have one inch of discomfort, I will not go to the board. We will leave the position open until I am comfortable," Maxson said.

Finfrock will continue his job as the director of the Thomas & Mack Center and the Sam Boyd Silver Bowl with either a three or five year contract in the works.

Maxson said that Vice President of Business Affairs Buster Neel would take over the position until the permanent athletic director was chosen.

"There were two votes. The first vote chose the top three out of the five. The second was the best out of the three," said Rodderick Colebrook who conducted the elections.

"We chose the person who was the general consensus of the committee. I feel it was done fairly and we didn't have any problems," Colebrook added.

PARKING

used for the new library. Plans for future residence halls have them extending out into the southeast parking lots. Restricted parking near the Juanita Greer White Life Sciences building will be diminished when the building expands into the neighboring parking lot. The Marjorie Barrick Museum of Natural History will expand into the adjacent parking lot when the new Energy Research Center is built. Finally, the eventual construction of the Greenspun School of Journalism, possibly on the corner of Maryland Parkway and University Road, will eliminate all the parking in those areas.

"To the best of my knowledge, the last three years the traffic and parking committee has recommended to the president that we institute a parking fee, the president still does not feel he is ready to accept it. It didn't pass," Hollenbeck said.

"The students at this point are able to convince the president that there should be no fee. All I can say is fine, we'll run the system as best we can but people should not expect parking to ever get better until we start putting some money into it. Until then, it will continue to deteriorate," he said.

David Hollenbeck, University Police chief, said there is currently parking for 22,000-24,000 people available on campus.

SENATE

who drafted the resolution, said students had to take action on the issue.

"Individual rights have been violated and we should condemn that," Stuhff said. "This action is undoubtedly against the law."

One paragraph of the resolution stated, "We are outraged and alarmed at the subordination of the academic mission of UNLV to athletics by the excessive use of the authority of the UNLV Administration for the stated purpose of appeasing

the NCAA."

One of the administrators involved in the controversy, Robert Ackerman, Vice President of Student Services was at the student senate meeting, but he didn't speak and left before the resolution was voted on.

Sen. Mike Young (liberal arts), who introduced the bill, said the resolution was hurriedly drafted, but he was sure the student body would support it. "I can't think of one person who was in favor of the video-taping," he added.

Warren White, Entertainment and Programming Director suggested the resolution would only mean more "bad press" for the university. Stuhff countered that if the Board of Regents investigates the incident, "There's going to be a lot more bad press," regardless of how the senate feels.

Senators voted 10-0, with one abstention, on another resolution recommending student evaluations as a primary part of instructor tenure and promotion.

The resolution was introduced by Sen. Bud Benneman after he learned one of his professors, Hans-Herman Hoppe, was denied tenure. Hoppe, he added, is an excellent teacher.

Benneman said some college deans at the university take evaluations seriously, but business and economics isn't one of them.

Instructors can be denied tenure because they don't publish enough.

It doesn't make sense that professors are judged by their peers and not who they teach. "Do other professors go to your class and sit there?" he asked.

Sen. Jerome Duran, (engineering) said some of the best instructors can't teach as many classes as they like because they must spend so much time publishing.

In other business, the Senate voted 12-0 to spend $800 on 5,000 pencils for Student Services.
