

* Student Natalie Fredericks also likes UNLV.

"I used to Indian dance with my aunt. We danced the women's fast dance and slow dance," said Fredericks, a sophomore from Carson City.

She said she's "a full blooded American Indian from Chippewa, Sioux, Paiute, and Shoshoni tribes. My dad works for the bureau of Indian affairs and my mother works for the State Employment Security.

"They support me a great deal... whatever makes me happy.

"Now, after so much intensive jazz and ballet, I hope I didn't forget the movements I learned from my aunt."

Fredericks wants to get a master's in dance and teach at a university level but before she does, she'd like to perform with a company for a couple of years.

"I started with jazz and liked ballet more; but I do both. It was something fun. I had been in gymnastics before that. I was intrigued by the low cost in-state tuition at UNLV and I had heard positive things about the dance department.

"I don't get to do a lot of campus activities other than rehearse for the university dance company, but that's what I'd rather do. It's a way for me to express myself, it helps me relax and it's a challenge for me." Fredericks will be in the forthcoming production "Parental Discretion Advised."

"It's a small campus and some of your classes are small enough so you can be on a personal basis with your instructor," notes Fredericks. "Freshmen year, it was nice to have the director of the department take the time for all the students to reassure you about your classes and give you encouragement."

The Dance Department offers an undergraduate BA degree and is looking forward to offering a BFA in dance performance and choreography.

Currently students are offered a master's in Music with a dance emphasis. Plans are being formed to develop a new MFA degree in dance.
