

STUDENT SPOTLIGHT

SURVEY OF STUDENTS ON CAMPUS

How would you change your study habits for the new year?

Ross Kurzer, junior, Communication Studies

"I would eliminate extracurricular activities that are not related to my courses, such as reading books or writing my poetry, in the vein of pursuing knowledge."

Latricia Dendy, sophomore, Athletic Training

"I would make out a study schedule and follow it."

Liesle Thomas,
sophomore,
Environmental Studies

"It all depends on my job and the hours I'm working. I try to study around my work schedule. Perhaps I should set a specific time each day for for studying."

Florence McClure,
graduate student,
Sociology

"I would get more privacy, keep out noise and distractions, like kittens coming into my room, so that I can concentrate better."

Xiang Xu,
graduate student,
Mechanical Engineering

"I would improve my efficiency in studying so that I can have time to learn more about American culture."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Dear Editor

I am upset with the misleading advertising the official UNLV bookstore has placed in The Rebel Yell. A few issues ago, I was looking through The Rebel Yell and decided to take a close look at the ads from the bookstore in question.

Before buying books this semester I compared prices at both stores. No, I found no major savings at Rebelbooks, but I did get to keep more cash in my pocket by shopping at the competition across the street. The store on campus states that if, for some bizarre fluke of nature, you buy a book from them and then find it for less, they'll give you the difference back in cash.

Where does the official UNLV Bookstore get off with saying the above statement. The chances are that you will find a few of your semester's books at a discount when you buy them at Rebelbooks. Some fluke indeed would be the chances that most people would not bother going through the hassle of trying to get their money back from the UNLV Bookstore.

Sure, if you do not have a few extra minutes to walk across the street, pay more at the Barns and Nobel Bookstore. For me, I think that I'll take my few dollars and put them in my pocket, not in the UNLV Bookstore's account.

Christopher Jeff Micklon

Dear Editor

If The Rebel Yell is being lauded as "still our newspaper," then I like The Yellin' Rebel better. Granted your disclaimer said that "opinions expressed do not necessarily reflect those of the UNLV student body or faculty." Whose opinions do they reflect? The entire staff's? The paper's an independent entity? If our campus R-J-in-miniature has finally taken a stance on an issue, then it is one I am not pleased with.

Three articles in two days have taken, if not a directly anti-abortion, then definitely an anti-choice stance on the issue of abortion. Am I to then assume that this is the Rebel Yell's position?

Dennis Monokroussos' articles discuss coldly and callously an issue that is very subjective and emotional in scope. William Holt's article...well, it's just crap. He throws the whole issue out the window and wrongly so. Many pro-choice groups do lobby to improve quality of life and conditions under which children should be raised. I expect a little better from you, William.

Maybe I am just ignorant to what an opinion page means, but I see nothing saying that the views expressed in this one are not those of the Rebel Yell. If they are, then I know a group that will fight you on those views.

P.S. It is also strange how "our" paper failed to make even one mention of the 19th anniversary of one of the most important Supreme Court cases in modern U.S. history, Roe vs. Wade.

Dean H. Steiner
Sociology Major
Honor's Program Student
Vice-President,
Students For Choice

Editor's note: Articles with bylines attached that are printed in the Opinion Pages of The Rebel Yell reflect those of the author. The only stories that reflect the opinions of The Rebel Yell are run as Rebel Yell editorials and are labeled as such.

Boulder Dan & Dipstik Duck

By Ray Collins

