

Senate President replaces senators Child care now offered during evening classes

by Tricia Ciaravino

Senate President Mike Kennedy said he had found replacements for the two senators who filed charges with their own committee against Jami Nalder.

Kennedy appointed senators William Romero and Horeigh Fischer to take the places of senators Scott Fisher and Crystal Ortega, who are members of the Rules Committee. Fisher, who is the chair, has appointed Mike Young as vice chair. Brian Devine, a new senator, commented at a senate meeting that he thought Nalder shouldn't be punished. Kennedy said he doesn't think Devine realized what he had said. But Kennedy said he can't take the chance that Devine won't be biased. He wants to replace Devine with Steve Huang.

"I personally don't think there will be any problems."

Kennedy said Lori Snyder, CSUN business manager, is looking into all rumors and charges dealing with money.

As enrollment at UNLV increases, more parents-turned-students are in need of on-campus care for their children.

Many students have relied on the UNLV-CSUN College of Education Pre-school to tend their kids. This center has always benefited students who attend day classes but there has always been an unfilled need for child care during evening classes.

Until this semester, students in search of a night care facility on campus have been out of luck. Fortunately, the day care center, formerly opened from 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m., has extended its hours until 7 p.m.

According to Michele Lansing, director of the child care program, evening care is in high demand. Although the extended hours exist only on a trial basis, Lansing said the need for evening child care will probably increase as enrollment in evening classes increases.

Located in the William D. Carlson Education Building, the child care center offers a variety of programs, from a fully equipped playground to a functioning preschool. Children between the ages of 2 1/2 and six are eligible for enrollment but may be put on a waiting list.

When asked what lies ahead for the center, Lansing said that a lot depends on space allocation. "With 100 children already involved in the program, the capacity for growth is limited."

"The preschool hours (9 to 11:30 a.m.) are the most desired times, making it the most crowded," Lansing said.

"Tuesdays and Thursdays are heavy nights," she said for those parents who are seeking night care.

Renovated MSU still has leakage problems

by Tricia Ciaravino

The Moyer Student Union may have water damage due to the overabundance of rain recently received.

According to Eric Walters, assistant director of MSU, the atrium (the dome which covers MSU) received the worst damage and leaked onto the first floor.

"During remodeling we didn't spend money to fix it," he said.

Walters said the sun shrinks the silicone glazing which covers the glass and leaks are the result.

Walters also said damage occurred in the second- and third-floor stairwells and on the third floor itself, but no one is sure what it's from.

"Some (leaks) were supposed to be fixed during renovation. It might be a contract problem," he said. "We have to take a look and see if it's the new roof. Sometimes water goes into the wall and (travels) down."

Walters said he is looking into the problems.

"It's getting much better," he said. "It used to be much worse."

Lions Club establishes scholarship

The Las Vegas Sunrise Lions Club recently established a $15,000 Endowed Korean Scholarship Fund.

The scholarship was set up through the UNLV Foundation. Interest from the endowment will fund one or more scholarships each year. Any full-time UNLV student, regardless of ethnic background, with proven academic ability and financial need can apply for the scholarship.

Members of the Las Vegas Sunrise Club are mostly of Korean descent. They raised money in their communities through an extensive glass and aluminum recycling effort to fund the scholarship.
