Harvard hosts condom art exhibit; NCAA tournament office pool probed

Divinity school hosts condom art exhibit

Cambridge, Mass. (CPS)—The condom has been elevated to the status of art at the Harvard Divinity School.

In an unusual art exhibit, titled "Sacred Condoms," Divinity school students viewed condoms covered with beads, fur, yarn, leather and feathers.

There were condoms filled with honey. There was even one with a tiny baby shoe in it.

Karen Norberg, the artist who created the body of condom works, is a psychiatrist and director of child psychiatry consultation at Boston City Hospital.

"The idea is to move away from the embarrassed, secretive, forbidden kind of association to making (condoms) acceptable," Norberg told the Associated Press.

However, the exhibit was open only 90 minutes a day for two weeks at a time when most students at the school were on vacation.

A Divinity school spokesperson said the exhibit was not publicized and was used in teaching students at the non-denominational school how to counsel people about sexuality.

Betting pool investigated

Asheville, N.C. (CPS)—Authorities have closed a state probe into an NCAA basketball tournament betting pool in which University of North Carolina, Asheville, staff members wagered $61.

The pool involved 42 staff members placing bets averaging a little more than $1 each.

No arrests were made and no action was taken, according to school officials who said they were "surprised" the State Bureau of Investigation launched the investigation.

"It was an office pool, just like so many others—no one was making money," said Mary Ann Epstein, director of public information.

Vice Chancellor Larry Wilson said the betting wasn't done on state time.

"We've been trying to get on Page One for years, but not this way," Epstein said.

Sports pools are not prohibited by state law, but they fall under the general statute banning gambling, which is a misdemeanor that carries a maximum penalty of two years in jail.

Coach at SIU resigns amid investigation

Edwardsville, Ill. (CPS)—The coach of the men's basketball team at Southern Illinois University, Edwardsville resigned April 2 in the midst of an investigation into his alleged mishandling of player meal money.

Larry Graham, who will officially step down June 30, cited "personal reasons" for his decision, according to a school statement.

The athletic department began investigating Graham and how he handled meal money intended for his players several months ago. Now the university's auditors are handling the case.
