Action for foreign students

ool," Hardgree 0 percent of fore are studying for ment. Interests s consist of Me and Electric En Chemistry and

"For one full year at the university each foreign student is obliged to pay a total amount of $18,525. This includes room and board and $3,600 in miscellaneous expenses," Hardgree stated.

"So far, for the last two years, our club has been very successful and is improving more each semester," said Mercera. The club meets once a week and there is no membership fee to join.

ission procedure for foreign students is complex. Each student must take the TOEFL (Test of English as a Foreign Language) exam, which is offered worldwide six times during the year. Undergraduates need to score 500, Hotel Administration majors 525, and graduate students 550.

After their acceptance, they are sent a form which must be presented to the nearest American Embassy or Consulate office in their country. They will then receive an F-VISA, which indicates that they are able to attend an American university as a full-time student. Transcripts of previous high school, college and university work are also required.

Bruno Billiet, an exchange student from France, is a senior with a concentration in hotel management. When asked what he thinks of the American students he replied, "I think that they are very friendly, energetic, ambitious and laid back."

In addition, they must have a financial certificate affirmed by their bank, indicating that they have the necessary funds available to attend UNLV.

A professional international counseling program is available for exchange students who have difficulties adapting to the American lifestyle.

I also think that UNLV is a great school and I am very excited that I am here," said Billiet. After graduation, Billiet plans on moving to Australia to pursue his career.

However, Hardgree explained that because the majority of UNLV's foreign students have experienced university life elsewhere, they seem to adjust fairly well.

Nairsimha Misra, an exchange student from India, is majoring in electrical engineering and has attended UNLV for two years.

An International Club also exists on campus for foreign exchange students.

"I think of Las Vegas as paradise when I compare it to Detroit," Misra said. "I find that the American students are very friendly, sharp and helpful."

"More than 300 students are involved," said Sixto Mercera, coordinator of the International Club.

When asked what he thinks of UNLV he replied, "It is a beautiful place. I love it." Misra would like to remain in Las Vegas, after graduation, if job opportunities are available.

He explained the club provides socials, trips, and sports events so students from all over the world are able to interact with each other.
