choice for Catwoman (the best incarnation since Eartha Kitt actually, Rrrrrrr!!) and her romance with Batman/Bruce Wayne (Michael Keaton) is unforgettable.

3) The Hairdresser's Husband—France's Patrice Leconte (Monsieur Hire) delivers another obsessively tragic and hilarious love story about a man with happy feet who fantasizes about the women who trim his lid.

2) The Crying Game—Yahoo critics are quick to jump on the Neil Jordan bandwagon, but where were they when Jordan made the beautiful film, The Miracle? They were panning it that's where they were. So all of you fair weather fans shame on you! American director's should take a lesson from Ireland's Jordan on how to tell a story. To say too much about The Crying Game would ruin it, so I'll just say it's a unusual love story thriller.

1) Twin Peaks: Fire Walk With Me—All I can say about this film is "Wow!" It's the type of film you either get or you don't, with no middle ground. Never before have I been so wrapped up in a film as Fire Walk With Me, but it helped to have a thorough understanding (or interpretation) of the television show to fully appreciate the Gothic parade of images and absorbing characters surrounding the final days of Laura Palmer, the Saran-wrapped Homecoming queen who would capture the hearts of twisted Americans. Once again, the Grand Wizard of the Sublime, David Lynch captures the darkness that lies underneath suburban America with style and pizzazz.

Honorable Mention: Deep Cover, Enchanted April, Gas Food Lodging, Glengarry Glen Ross, Hero, Malcolm X, Prelude To A Kiss, Scent of A Woman, Unforgiven and Wayne's World.

Biggest Disappointments: A Few Good Men, Buffy The Vampire Slayer, Cool World, Far and Away, Lethal Weapon III, My Cousin Vinny, One False Move, White Men Can't Jump, yatta, yatta, yatta.

This really isn't The Holy Roller of the Rock Avenue. But even if it were, we, The Rebel Yell Layout Staff, would still listen to his show, as diligently as we always do on Thursdays from 2 a.m. to 6 a.m. on KUNV 91.5
