

Picking up chicks at the library humor

by LaMont Biscuits

For all of you who think the MSU is the hot spot for meeting the woman of your dreams, you're sorely mistaken. UNLV's most fertile hunting grounds are located within the confines of the James R. Dickinson Library.

Even though the stale air and fluorescent lights of the library are guaranteed to give you a headache and quite possibly a nosebleed, you'll find the finest bunnies and foxes on campus frolicking about every nook and cranny of the place.

On any given day, you're bound to find the right woman for you, whatever your preference. There are intelligent women; sorority bimbos masquerading as intelligent women (who are they kidding?); transvestites that look like a cross between Elvis and Phyllis Diller; or those sub-human babes who shelve the books in the darkest regions of the library. I almost forgot those blue-haired librarian biddies—they're enough to knock even the biggest Romeo's socks off.

Proper attire is a must for the UNLV lady killer. A rhinestone jumpsuit might get you laid at Vegas World, but it's a definite no-go on campus. The women on campus appreciate guys with originality and panache. They don't dig the dudes who look like everyone else. C'mon, it's not like you can go in looking like a pretty-boy clone with all flash and no substance, the women here are above that. Don't be discouraged that these are the only guys you actually see with women, that's the MSU babe, we're talking the library.

When actually confronting the lady of your choosing, the ol' standby pick-up lines like "What's your sign?" or "Your place or mine" usually don't swing so well with the great minds at UNLV. I find that ones like "Weren't we in that Indian blanket weaving class together?" or "Can you help me find some microfiche on the E coli bacteria, I've just eaten at Jack in the Box?" work like a charm. The women will be smitten by your quest for knowledge or at the very least, simply dismayed by the foul stench emanating from your anus if you choose the latter of the two.

Howling catcalls like a construction worker at the women who walk across the landings between buildings will sometimes work, just be careful not to disturb your fellow library patrons, or somebody might say, "Shhh-hh!, this is a library," as if you didn't know the difference between the library and say, the Lilly Fong Geoscience Building.

The early morning hours till noon are generally prime time for catching the commuter crowd, but late nights usually prove more fruitful for finding the strange and undoubtedly more exciting women. Any woman that can stay in the library all day until it closes without getting cabin fever is a true camper in my book.

A word of warning though, stay out of the first floor of the round building unless you like women with missing limbs or ones that look like Mr. T. That place is like a morgue. I thought I saw Jack Klugman down there.

And for those of you who read about the guy who got busted for exposing himself in the library last week, don't believe a word of it. (My penis was in the book long before that chick even opened it. I said, "Excuse me, I think I was reading that first.")

My high school English teacher once told me the library was the best place to meet women, and boy was he right. He bummed a smoke off of some chick and eventually married her. So who knows, you may ask some fine young filly for a Lucky Strike non-filter and find yourself at Hunka-Hunka Burning Love Wedding Chapel down on Fremont Street.

Happy hunting, and always remember, when it comes down to making out, play side two of Led Zeppelin 4.

weak schedule. The Rebels dropped two spots down to No. 12 in Monday's AP poll. This is not bad considering that UNLV lost to Pacific, a school that is not recognized for their strength in basketball.

This year, however, the Rebels have played a strong schedule. They beat 15th-ranked Marquette (17-3) and then knocked off 17th-ranked Georgetown (12-6). UNLV completes its non-conference schedule against No. 25 Louisville (13-5). And that doesn't include New Mexico State (17-4) and Long Beach State (14-5), which both defeated national powerhouses. In college basketball, teams have role players and that's a fact. Gibson is one and I'd bet my last letter that every coach in the country would like to have a player similar to Gibson available off the bench. However, don't ever let him start!

Let's face it, he plays 21 minutes a game, runs off and on the bench like a see-saw, and shoots the ball from the outside. To shoot the ball from 19 feet, 6 inches with consistency is no easy task.
