UNLV received the second installment of a $4 million donation Wednesday for the school's Donald W. Reynolds Student Services Center, currently under construction.

Representatives of the Review-Journal and Donrey Outdoor Advertising handed UNLV President Robert Maxson a $1 million check on behalf of the Donald W. Reynolds Foundation, which two years ago agreed to fund the project. Reynolds, who died in April, was founder of the Donrey Media Group.

Maxson predicted the student center would be the "future focal point" of the UNLV

Online

During the '80s, computer-use became more commonplace and on-line computer services such as America Online, Prodigy, SprintMail, MCIMail, and EasyLinks sprang up everywhere.

Originally, many of these services charged a flat monthly fee. Now, instead of charging a low monthly fee, many of these services have begun to charge for their services on an hourly basis. For instance, Prodigy used to charge $15 per month for its services. This change in pricing scheme has raised the on-line fees for some users dramatically.

The Internet, on the other hand, charges the academic and commercial institutions services for their particular "domains," giving the perception to many users that services are free.

Recently companies have tried to use the net for commercial purposes, including blatant advertising of their products.

According to The Wall Street Journal, a San Diego firm tried using direct-marketing through the net's e-mail function. The company was promptly "flamed" by many users and potential clients for its violation of "netiquette." With more computer users having commercial intentions, the net itself is in danger of losing government support.
