

Stewart goes to Division II school

Kebu Update:
First day of school
and no Kebu

On the first day of school there were approximately 18,000 students on campus. One, however, was missing: basketball player Kebu Stewart.

It looks as if Stewart has jumped ship and will move to a new program. Possible schools in the running for Stewart include Division II CS Bakersfield and Southampton University in New York.

Southampton has the edge since Stewart is close friends with former Rebel Sidney Green, who was recently hired as head basketball coach. This school would be convenient for Stewart, since they don't start classes until the end of September.

Stewart, the 1994 Big West Player of The Year, has had several problems while at UNLV.

First, he accepted a gift of a plane ticket home to New York, a direct violation of NCAA policy.

After a lengthy suspension Stewart was back in trouble again. This time for missing work-outs, team gatherings and classes.

At one time he was actually missing and nowhere to be found.

Then, following a few false injuries, Stewart was back. The bad side of this is that the Rebels were playing excellently with freshman Eric Lee in Stewart's spot. This time Stewart violated yet another rule by accepting a gift of a pair of basketball shoes.

This violation takes the cake, since all basketball players receive unlimited free shoes just for being part of the program. Finally, the University athletic officials suspended him for the season.

Faced with a pass summer school or sit out for the season dilemma, Kebu choked again. A poor performance in summer school and a no show on the first day, officially set Kebu free to find a new team.

Prince Fowler transfers to TCU

BY RAY BREWER

The soap opera continues. UNLV basketball player Prince Fowler announced before the beginning of the semester that he has decided to transfer to Texas Christian University.

Fowler will be reunited with Billy Tubbs at TCU, who originally recruited Fowler to play for the University of Oklahoma. However, before Fowler arrived, Tubbs took a coaching vacancy at TCU.

When coach Bill Bayno was hired, he successfully recruited the 5'9" Fowler, and brought him back home to Las Vegas where Fowler attended high school.

Despite working out with the team over the summer,

Fowler never signed his national letter of intent, therefore he did not lose a year of eligibility. Then, to the Rebels' surprise, Fowler tossed his scarlet and red uniform aside for a purple TCU jersey.

Fowler's departure, days before the first day of school, leaves one scholarship open, but there is not enough time for Coach Bayno to fill the opening.

After a strong signing off-season, the Rebels did not see the Fowler departure coming.

The Rebels future is still bright with new recruit Chancellor Davis, a junior college transfer, running the court as the floor general.

The Fowler situation opens the door for another controversial basketball season, and Coach Bayno may have his hands full in his first season as the Rebel's skipper.
