

Little Feat to rock The Joint

The legendary rock and roll band Little Feat will appear in concert 8 p.m. Saturday at The Joint at the Hard Rock Hotel and Casino.

The Southern California septet has attracted a loyal following throughout its 25-year career with its ever-evolving synthesis of blues, R&B, country and jazz. The band has undergone another musical transformation on its 13th album, "Ain't Had Enough Fun."

The group's most recent recording is a 13-song collection ranging from rump-wiggling boogie woogie to soulful balladry and savory, Louisiana-style rock'n roll.

Newly recruited vocalist Shaun Murphy is at the center of the band's unique sound. Testifying in a robust voice reminiscent of Etta James, Murphy provides counterpoint to the funky rhythms provided by Sa Clayton, Richie Hayward and Kenny Gradney.

"This move has been great for Shaun and for the band," says founding member Bill Payne. "Shaun inspired us to get back to our original blues and R&B roots. There was a concentrated effort this time to make music that jumped and had some fire to it, and with her help we succeeded."
