I wonder if Julio Cesar Chavez knows who De La Hoya is. It would appear he doesn't, since he is setting up to fight De La Hoya in the next year or so...

Chavez will have to postpone that 100-win celebration until after the De La Hoya fight...

Speaking of lost causes, I wonder if Buster Mathis, Jr. has talked to Peter McNeeley about how hard Tyson is hitting these days. Oh wait, I guess that wouldn't do any good because McNeeley probably doesn't know for sure, since he lasted just 89 seconds...

I think it would do Mathis some good if he read the story about George Custer...

Hey, didn't you used to be Buster Douglas?

Did everyone get their hotel room in Baker, yet? I sure did, the minute I heard Fox was showing the Tyson fight. It is right there next to that giant phallic symbol they call a thermometer...

Whew, was it hot, or was it just the National League West pennant race?

Or was it the American League West pennant race?

Has anyone gone to Los Angeles lately to eat Italian food? Of course not, because the Dodgers have been in the toughest division race in the last 10 years and Lasorda is pounding the pasta until the Blue Crew gets through the playoffs this season...

It really is too bad the Angels weren't able to hold on to their first place lead in the American League West, I was looking forward to seeing how they were going to choke this season in the playoffs...

This baseball season's top three phenomena, in my estimation are: 1. Hideo Nomo capturing the imagination of the baseball world like Fernando Valenzuela did 13 years ago, 2. The Cleveland Indians winning the division and going to the playoffs for the first time in 41 years and 3. Cal Ripken breaking Lou Gehrig's consecutive games played mark of 2,130...

Runnin' Rebels answer center question

UNLV receives verbal commitment from Keon Clark

BY MICHAEL MELISSA
SPORTS EDITOR

It has been four years since the Rebels had a legitimate big man in the center.

They may have just gotten one.

Keon Clark, a 6-foot-11-inch center, has given a verbal commitment to play for UNLV.

Clark will have to sign a letter of intent by Nov. 8, and receive his Associate of Arts degree this semester to finalize the agreement. By doing so, he could join the team as early as Dec. 16.

Clark will have the second half of the 1995-96 season, along with the next two years, of eligibility. His arrival would be in time for the Ball State game at the Thomas & Mack Center.

As a center for Irvine Valley College in California, Clark was named to the first-team All-California Juco team. He was originally set to attend

Temple, but when he failed to graduate with his A.A. degree last semester he became recruitable again.

Clark is attending classes this semester at Dixie College in St. George, Utah, and has been working out with the Dixie basketball team to stay in shape.

Currently, UNLV has 6-foot-10-inch Eric Lee as the only true center on the roster. Kebu Stewart was the other center, but transferred to Cal State Bakersfield after being suspended by UNLV last spring.
