

TOUCHY TOUCHY
Iowa State U.

Ever want to jump up and touch the goal posts before a football game? Just reach on up there and...oops. U. of Iowa freshman band member Robert Ralbocki got on a friend's shoulders to touch Iowa State's goal post before the Iowa-Iowa State game, but as he was hanging from it, the post got a little tipsy. In fact, it was falling down. Both sides say they'll stick to the tradition of the players tearing down the posts after a victory. But not us, Robert.

ALL PRESENT? BEEP!
Michigan State U.

Students aren't just numbers at MSU — they're U.P.s. Not only are ID cards worn when students go to the cafeteria, now some economics professors are experimenting with swiping the card to check attendance. The U.P. card was tested on two days, and all 800 students checked in on time. Either that or they all ordered the fruit and veg. One of those.

SMOKE THE VOTE
U. of Massachusetts, Amherst

The protemperance-man, quia nolo iurare quia bar rap. Who are these non-motivated enough to smoke by a statute and work for the legislature. The students are... The... in the... will... their parents.

LIP SERVICE
Northern Illinois U.

Talk about slow news days. U. Magazine got a big shipment of Blistex products (with zipping lip-shaped chocolate too — thanks Blistex), but you don't see us wasting valuable space pushing Blistex. Blistex. Blistex. nah nah nah! The weekend edition of the Northern Star, however, devoted a whole page to the budacious balms. OK, they were a little tongue-in-cheek themselves. They scolded the company for not considering its male consumers and ended by asking for reader suggestions on lip gloss uses. Next week: a scathing expose on new Tylenol Cold and Flu.

QUICKIES

ILLUSTRATIONS BY WENDY GARDNER FOR COLUMBIAN DAILY

GOD ON THEIR SIDE
U. of Nebraska

Herbie Flusker, the longtime mascot of Nebraska's Cornhuskers, was recently retired by the administration in favor of a new, yet-to-be-named mascot. As you can imagine, this did not go over too well with many Nebraska traditionalists. Of all the forces rallying to save Herbie, none are as tough and tenacious as, well, as the Contemplative Sisters of the Good Shepherd. Six nuns at the north Omaha convent have taken to sewing Herbie Flusker windsocks in support of the fallen mascot. Although the convent has been sewing the windsocks for the past six years, orders have quadrupled this season. Why are the sisters so supportive of Herbie? "He's civilized," says Sister Grace Irene Marshall. "He's the only one we don't have to go behind and pick up after."

to contribute $5 to Campus Cannabis Coalition. Says the U. Mass chancellor, who disagrees with the decriminalization of marijuana: "It should not be high on the university agenda. Oh, well, wanna hit?"

NOSE BETTING LONGER?
U. of Virginia

Yah! and Y Ashwos that when college students call home, there's a 50-50 chance that they'll be to Mom. The study was based on the diaries of 77 UVA students in which they recorded every conversation they had and what lies.

they told for a week. The best group reported a total of 1,000 lies — about two a day for each student. The most common lie to Mom is that books cost more than they do — so she'll send more money. Another popular lie is that you're staying in for the night to study. Yeah, right. Pffoooo.

CREDIT CONDOM
Clemson U.

In an effort to get people to practice safe spending, those financial wizards at the National Center for Financial Education have gone and slipped, er, broken, into the condom craze. The Center manufactured prophylactics for your plastic — the small slips of paper form a pocket for credit cards. Clemson distributed thousands to its students.

Now, before they charge on in there, students have to take the time to remove the credit card from the condom. Clemson hopes they'll make students think twice before they spend. If only they'd make those for pints of Ben and Jerry's.

SOY SAUCE
U. of Missouri, Columbia

This school takes soybeans seriously. "The future number of students that will benefit from taking a look at the technological aspects of soybeans will continue to grow — this is where the interest is," assures Steve Knorr, assistant director for the development of the agriculture college. MU is conducting a national search for the lucky recipient of an endowed professorship in soybean bio-technology. Don't laugh. The endowment is $1,100,000. That's a lotta beans. Interested yet?

THANK HEAVEN FOR SCIENCE
Harvard U.

Residents of fraternity and sorority houses are far more likely to go on drinking binges than their classmates, according to a study by researchers at Harvard U. Duh.

UPS AND DOWNS
U. of Idaho

A fraternity and a sorority at Idaho have really gone through some highs and lows recently. The Farmhouse fraternity and the women of Delta Delta Delta teeter-tottered for 48 hours to raise and lower and raise and lower and raise money for children's cancer research. The event drew to a close when a Tridelt said, "Teeter totter, totter teeter... let's call the whole thing off." The two houses raked in $423 for the effort, and the members, undaunted, are now going to sit on ice packs for 48 straight hours. We doubt they'll raise much money for this year.

BEEHOMETER
Rochester Institute of Technology

After years and years of extensive research, the work of three RIT engineering students came to a head. The trio has invented a keg tap that will tell even the drunkest reader how much brew is left in the barrel. The hallmark of the new tap design is that it doesn't increase the foam quotient of the out-coming beverage. "There is just no other way to tell how much beer is left," explains co-creator Dave Kneale. Finally, an answer to one of this country's greatest riddles. These modern-day Edisons are currently working on a project to determine how many licks it takes to get to the center of a Twosie Roll Pop.

SEIZE YOUR SALAD

San Diego State U.

One of the most sought after items this country has seen in years was brought to justice. A San Diego State student was cited after allegedly stealing a $5.76 salad from a university eatery. The alleged criminal hid the salad between her body and a spiral notebook. As a diversion, she became entangled in a conversation on her cellular phone and walked coolly past the cashier. An SDSU theft-prevention agent saw the transgressor in the act, followed a crouton trail and caught the culprit red-handed (Catalina dressing). After asking her to end her phone conversation, the officer cited the outlaw for petty theft.

