on-one with a health care professional.

Steven Oster, counselor and outreach coordinator for Student Psychological Services, said the purpose of the student outreach program is twofold.

"Many people are fearful of coming in for help," Oster said. "We thought we'd do programming in problematic areas that many people have. We want to give information out to students who are afraid of counseling."

Oster said he hopes to generate greater participation from members of the Greek system, the athletic department and from collegiate organizations. He explained that student groups are often more likely to seek help than individuals.

"Group therapy is impactful," Oster said. "There is a support group in them (organizations).

"It's hard to tell when people will come forward, but if it's a group effort, (most students feel) it's a little bit safer," Oster said.

The NEDSP outreach program is one in a series of programs sponsored by Student Psychological Services during the Spring semester.

The series, "Internal Dress for Success: Accessories for Getting Ahead," includes seminars that focus on assertiveness, stress management, dealing with difficult people and developing healthy relationships.

Correction

In the "Senate approves Saliba raise," story in the Feb. 1 issue of The Rebel Yell, Entertainment and Programming Director Brian Saliba's yearly credit waiver was incorrectly reported. Saliba's raise entitles him to 27 credits per year, not per semester. The Rebel Yell apologizes for this error.
