Salaries continue with the athletic department

The Rebel Yell

The Rebel Yell 's look at the salaries of members of the UNLV community continues today with the athletic department.

As with the other parts of this series, the information is for the 1997-98 academic year and is current as of April 26. The listed salaries do not included any outside contracts (shoe, television, radio, etc.) or non-cash compensation. Also, some salaries may be greater than the amount listed because the individual was not employed in their position for the entire academic year.

Due to an editing error, most salaries from the College of Education were omitted from previous editions. This series will conclude on Monday with those figures.

REID TO HOST FORUM ON EATING DISORDERS AT UNLV

Nevada Senator Harry Reid and his wife Landra will hold a forum on eating disorders on Saturday, May 2 at the Marjorie Barrick Museum of Natural History Auditorium at UNLV.

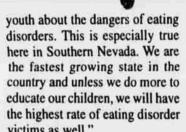

'Eating disorders affects the lives of thousands of Nevadans and more than eight million Americans," Reid said. "Increasingly they are affecting a younger, more diverse segment of the population. We must begin to educate our youth about eating disorders at an elementary school level. It is important that we emphasize the value of a healthy diet and regular exercise.'

Reid and his wife Landra teamed up with Amy Hyams, the local Las Vegas representative of National Association of Anorexia Nervosa & Associated Disorders (ANAD) to organize the free forum. The Reids encourage all members of the public to attend, including families, friends and loved ones of people who suffer from eating disorders. Last year Mrs. Reid sponsored an eating disorders forum for medical professionals in conjunction with the University of Nevada Medical School.

Panelists at the Reids forum include local physicians, Nevadans with eating disorders, Ann Jenich, President of ANAD and Stacy Kole - Miss Arizona who has suffered from eating disorders and has made eating disorder awareness her national platform.

Reid, a sponsor of the 1997 Eating Disorders Information and Education Act, worked as a member of the Senate Labor, Health and Human Services Appropriations Committee to secure resources and encourage research of eating disorders. He has also introduced a Senate Resolution designating May 6 as National Eating Disorder Awareness Day. "Eating disorders affect all levels of society but they are especially prevalent among the young," Reid said. "Eighty-six percent of victims report the onset of their illness by the age of 20. Every state in the nation has extensive program to prevent alcohol and drug abuse but there are very few programs to educate our the public and will begin at 11 a.m. in the Marjorie Barrick Museum

For more information call Reid's Nevada office at 1-702-474-0041.

Women in Communications and marketing students for the 1998-99 school year.

At its April meeting, WIC awarded five $3,000 scholarships to members of the Association of Students in Communications (ASC), WIC's students chapter based on the UNLV campus. Those awarded include juniors Nicole De Mauro, Rick Kimbrough, Pauline Villapando, Dalicia Ramey and senior Brittany Sinner. The students were awarded based on grade point average, an essay, participation in ASC and a brief presentation made at the luncheon.

SCHOLARSHIPS TO UNLV An additional $10,000 will STUDENTS be awarded through UNLV Financial Aid. A $2,500 scholarwill award up to $25,000 in scholship for communications and a arships to UNLV communications 00 scholarship for marketing mousury.

will be offered to incoming freshman of the 1998-99 school year. In addition, four $1,000 scholarships will be available for parttime, returning or transfer students. The remaining scholarship money will be placed in an emergency fund.

ASC affords students the opportunity to gain scholarships and includes mentor and internship programs. ASC members are given the opportunity to learn from professionals currently working in the communications industry through the programs.

WIC is an association of professionals in the communications industry whose efforts are directed at raising scholarship funds for UNLV students and promoting the open exchange of ideas within the victims as well." The event is free and open to

SENATE: Moore presides for the final time over the senate

Kimbrough told Mills that her son would not be in power on the first when the meeting takes place and therefore, Mills does not have to be present at the meeting.

During the public announcements portion of the meeting, the CSUN office secretaries voiced their concerns about their hours being cut by as much as 60 percent. The secretaries alleged that Senator Leia Cartwright had made derogatory comments against secretaries and other CSUN officials.

One of the secretaries pointed out that one of Cartwright's friends was hired which she claimed was "nepotism."

Cartwright later responded to the allegations by saying that nepotism is hiring a family member, not a friend.

A committee is looking into the matter to see if any wrong doing has taken place.

Mills also claimed that laws were violated at the meeting because there were not enough chairs for the gallery to sit in. There were more spectators at this meeting than usual and there were not enough chairs to accompany everyone who originally showed up.

The senate will meet on Monday as Kimbrough will make his inaugural debut as senate president.

ETHICS: Local prominent community members discuss ethics in workplace interview process," he said. "This is not taken easily. This is not taken lightly."

Feldman agreed, saying that Mirage Resorts also has a stringent program in place that candidates seeking money and endorsements must undergo.

"We talk to every candidate in Clark County races and in all of the statewide races," he said. "Our interviews are based on honesty, intelligence and commitment. Of those, the last is the most important."

Both Buehrer and Feldman insisted that there is no coercion on the part of their companies to get their employees to vote for candidates that the company endorses, although both companies strongly encourage all of their employees to vote.

"We produce a candidate guide for our employees and put a star next to those we like," Feldman said. "These guides look very similar to what you see in the newspapers. We use the biographical information given to us by the candidates themselves. It's really no different from what you get in the papers. But we have no way of knowing who our employees actually vote for."

The evening ended with the panelists discussing the role of the media in politically charged events. Neilson raised the most provocative question of the evening when she said, "We (in the media) have to ask ourselves, are we doing a service or a disservice? Are we creating news or just reporting it?"

This led to a discussion of the recent glut of information, some true and some false, surrounding recent high-profile events and the responsibility of the media.

"The proof is the Monica Lewinski case," Ralston said. "Lots of information got out before it was proved. It is a story, but now no one wants to talk about it because it got too big. Things like this are nightmarish for this industry."

However, Neilson said that the industry is unlikely to change in the near future.

"First of all, we're a business," she said. "We should take the long-term view that we're going to make money because people trust us. But the competition forces the issue sometimes."

The entire panel agreed that the media must take more responsibility for their actions, but that they should not bear the complete blame for the lack of political involvement by citizens.

"The media is not responsible for not getting people involved in the process," Bell said. "For many of the people I see, they are struggling simply to survive, not to get involved.'

The discussion was sponsored by CSUN and the Greenspun School of Communication. The event was developed and created by Rebecca Cecil and Dalicia Ramey, students majoring in communications.
