JEWS ABSOLVED

ROME WNS) A revised declaration on Jews, clearing the Jewish people of collective guilt in the death of Christ and deploring anti-Semitism was adopted here at the fourth session of the Ecumenical Council following an effort by liberal prelates to restore the word "deicide" in the text. The vote was 1,763 to 250.

The original text, exculpating the Jewish people of guilt in the death of Christ, used the word "deicide." The amended text omits that identification. Instead it says that "although the Jewish authorities and those who followed their lead pressed for the death of Christ, nevertheless what happened to Christ in the Passion cannot be attributed to all Jews, without distinction, then alive, nor to the Jews of today."

Deletion of the word "deicide" and the use of the word "deplore" instead of "condemn" in connection with anti-Semitism was deemed by many liberal churchmen as a serious weakening of the intent of the declaration. However, the original draft did not include the word anti-Semitism and many felt its inclusion in the amendment was a strengthening element. Church officials explained the use of the word deplore on the ground that major Vatican statements do not employ the word "condemn."

Earlier, before the voting, Augustian Cardinal Bea, president of the Vatican Secretariat for Christian Unity, and one of the leading advocates of a strong Vatican declaration on Jews, said that deletion of the word "deicide" did not weaken the original text, declaring that the "substance of what we wished to express in the prior text by this word is found exactly and completely expressed in the new text." "It is known," he declared, "that difficulties and controversies--for example, that the schema could contradict the Gospel--have in fact arisen especially because of the use of this word." He also defended the use of the word "deplore" on the ground that the word "condemn" in the Catholic Church is reserved for "formal heresy."

Jewish circles who stood close to developments in Rome during the four sessions of the Ecumenical Council were concerned about the amended draft, especially over the omission of the word "deicide." It had long been rumored that an amended draft would be submitted to the current session of the Council, but whenever the rumors cropped up Church officials were reluctant to either confirm or deny them.

Now that the matter is a closed chapter, it is felt that the effectiveness of the declaration, historic by all measures, will depend on its implementation on all levels of the Church structure.

Meet Justice of Peace

JUDGE JIM BRENNAN

by Claire Dase

If you have ever had cause to sit in the Justice Court that deals with the so-called minor cases, you will have listened to the sharp, crisp sentences handed down by it's judge. You wonder how one can deal with so many at a time, and all with a fair verdict. Then you start to pondering about the man handing the decisions out and you look long and hard at the dark-haired, dark-eyed, pale-faced young jurist, who observes shrewdly from behind his horn rimmed glasses. You wonder if he ever smiles, and what it would do for his placid features. Suddenly he removes his "specs" breaks into the
