citizens. The more a people advances intellectually, the greater is its need and demand for freedom.
People outgrow their freedom as children outgrow their clothes. This explains why the cry for freedom is continuously sounded in different parts of the world at different times. The battle for freedom then is virtually ceaseless.

In our day, as in days past, people are expressing their desire and will to free themselves from their enslavers so that they may live fuller lives and be afforded the opportunity of creating and enjoying the fruits of their labors.

The greater the desire for freedom, the clearer is the sign of a people advancing from darkness into the light and the greater is the promise for better things to come.

Jewish deliverance from Egyptian bondage produced a system of laws which proclaimed the dignity of man, the sacredness of human life. Similarly, the breaking away of the American colonies from British rule resulted in the American Constitution, the Bill of Rights, the Declaration of Independence -- documents guaranteeing the equality of all human beings regardless of race, color or credo.

"The Life of the Law," said Oliver Wendell Holmes, "has been experience. The felt necessities of the times. The law embodies the story of a nation's development through many centuries." The development of the law in effect is a reflection of the development of a people's march toward new spiritual frontiers.

Freedom is the greatest creative force. It enables a person to be himself, to flourish, to prosper, to contribute his talents and genius for the welfare and benefit of all mankind.

Freedom is as essential to man's inner growth as food is to his body.

No law, therefore, can be enforced for long if it cuts off freedom from the human soul; no government or society can long endure unless its laws are designed to encourage and protect man's growth and his need to be free.

The festival of Passover is an eternal reminder that the freedom which our forebears gained for themselves in their day is for us to regain in our own days.
