

Barney Glazer's "HOLLYWOOD HOTLINE"

John Garfield, Jr., son of the late Jewish stage and film star, is making another bid to follow in his father's footsteps. That's not the young fellow's real name but he adopted it to let a bit of that magic nepotism rub off. Unfortunately, John's dad isn't around to help, as are Frank Sinatra, Jerry Lewis, Dean Martin, Rex Harrison, Henry Fonda and other proud parents who are lending a personal push to their offsprings' careers.

I might suggest that these aforementioned gents and others in their fortunate position in Hollywood extend a helpful hand to the son of a brother actor who enjoyed their public acclaim but not their survival luck.

Garfield plays an important role in Carl Foreman's "Mackenna's Gold" for Columbia Pictures release. The youngster appears in scenes with Gregory Peck and Edward G. Robinson, who worked frequently with his illustrious father.

LAWRENCE HARVEY, original name Larushka Skikne, dropped off in Tel Aviv to visit his parents and brother, permanent residents. The worldly actor was en route to London for his appearance in "A Dandy in Aspic" with Mia Sinatra and Tom Courtney.

While in Israel, Harvey was the guest of Mrs. Charlotte Matalon, Columbia Pictures' distributor for Israel.

The Jewish actor said he would happily participate in production of an Israeli movie if he could find a good script. He noted that Israeli films merit only passing mention and that foreign films about Israel are even worse.

FRANK SINATRA lost his prospective Jewish son-in-law when real estate Sammy Hess and Christina Sinatra called off their planned marriage. Showers had been held in February and March and the wedding rehearsal-dinner was set for May 11 at Hillcrest Country Club. Frank's parents were scheduled to fly in from New Jersey for the rehearsal.

Intimates of the couple suggest that Tina decided at zero hour, possibly heeding the advice of others, that her career should precede marriage. She's only a youngster, 19, not too recently out of high school, and undoubtedly has been influenced by the many successes of her older sister, Nancy.

Also, Nancy's early marriage to Tommy Sands failed, which could have been duly noted by Tina. Meanwhile, Sammy told his mother and dad, "Don't write it off. Tina may still be your daughter-in-law."

Religion differences never influenced the pair or their respective families. Frank Sinatra had welcomed and received Sammy as a prospective son-in-law with an open mind and open arms. Young Hess is a handsome young man who ingratiates himself immediately with everyone he meets.

AT HER Riviera Hotel opener in Las Vegas, Abbe

Lane singled out Eddie Robins, popular pit boss at the Stardust Hotel, for the subject of her teasing, tantalizing tune, "Big Spender," while Eddie's wife, Sally, beamed at his side approvingly. According to Sally, "With that gal's shape and looks, I'm not about to let my big spender any farther away than my side while she's in the neighborhood."

During the same Riviera engagement, co-stars Marty Allen and Steve Rossi said, "We made a movie for Paramount called 'Last of the Secret Agents.' I played a half-Jewish and half-Japanese spy. Every Sept. 7, I attacked Pearl Schwartz." Marty also commented, "Sammy Davis Jr., ought to fight Cassius Clay. We could use a Jewish champion."
