 established in the Middle East. It will take super-human efforts on the part of our Israeli brethren to see the task through, and it will unquestionably call for the continued aid and devotion on the part of every American Jew. We will all pray for peace, but our prayers will have to be augmented with deeds of personal sacrifice. And we will pray for peace in our own beloved country, as well as overseas. Our boys are still making the supreme sacrifice every day on the far-flung battlefronts of Vietnam. Yet, in the final analysis there is much to be thankful for. In Israel our Jewish brethren will worship in a free Jerusalem, and the tears which will be shed by the devout, will at long last be tears of gratitude, not tears of pain and sorrow. Here and in every free land we will again enjoy and implement the cherished freedom of prayer. We will give thanks that we have come through the old year, and acknowledge the infinite wisdom of the Almighty for the loved ones or dear friends who were taken from us. In our prayers, we will ask that we be granted a good year, but prayer is not a one-way street. There must be evidence of our willingness to share our blessings with those less fortunate. We must be ready and willing to support wholeheartedly our own House of God, so that our community will always have a Sanctuary for worship services. Only after doing our share can we, with clear conscience, approach the High Holidays and expect forgiveness for our sins. This then is my prayer. May we be worthy of happiness in 5728! For in being worthy we may see a cessation of hostilities all over the world. Our boys will return home! Israel, Vietnam and all other strife-torn countries will finally enjoy peace! In our own land, understanding and mutual respect will do away with hatred and jealousy. I am grateful for this opportunity, in behalf of my children, grandchildren and myself, to wish each and every one of you a blessed year of contentment. May all your personal dreams come true, and may all your prayers be answered.

I hope this New Year will be a happy and prosperous one.

In this solemn and holy season, let us all renew our efforts and prayers for peace and brotherly love in all corners of the world.
