AJC MEET IN SAN FRANCISCO

Mayor Jerome P. Cavanagh of Detroit, Shimon Peres, Secretary General of Israel's Rafi Party and his country's former Deputy Defense Minister, and Morris B. Abram, President of the AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE, are among the national and international figures who will address sessions of the agency's annual National Executive Board meeting, to be held Thursday through Sunday, November 30 through December 3, at the Fairmont Hotel, San Francisco.

Mayor Cavanagh, whose topic will be "Cities Are NOT For Burning," and Mr. Abram will be the principal speakers at the dinner meeting, Saturday night, December 2, to be attended by 800 AJC leaders from across the country, it was announced by Lloyd Katz, Chairman Las Vegas unit.

In his address, Mayor Cavanagh will discuss why racial violence erupted in Detroit this past summer after the nation's fifth largest city had been a model of restraint for many years, and what private agencies and individuals alike AJC and its members can do to ease tensions in the city. Mr. Abram, who also is U.S. member of the UN Human Rights Commission, in his Presidential address will touch on progress in human rights since the United Nations Charter and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights were approved 20 years ago in San Francisco.

Samuel A. Ladar, noted San Francisco attorney, will receive the AJC's Human Relations Award at Saturday night's dinner. Prior to the event, Edgar Sinton and Melvin M. Swig will be co-chairmen of a reception in Mr. Ladar's honor.

The National Executive Board, principal governing body of the AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE, sets major policy on program and institutional activities. Each fall it meets in a major American city other than New York, which is its national headquarters and scene of its annual meeting every spring. Phillip E. Hoffman, prominent attorney and Chairman of the Executive Committee of the U.S. Realty and Investment Co. in Newark (N.J.), is chairman of the AJC's Executive Board.

The year's four-day meeting will include sessions of AJC's Western Regional Conference. The opening session, a luncheon meeting on Thursday, will be given over to a panel discussion on "The Values of Jewish Youth -- Rebellion and Continuity," led by Milton Himmelfarb, Director of the AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE's Jewish Information Service and Contributing Editor of COMMENTARY magazine. In presenting an analysis of the issues arising from "the generation gap" between Jewish youth and their parents, the symposium will assess the quality and direction of new developments among Jewish college-age youth, including the hippie movement, secular humanism, and religious conformity.

Panel respondents will be Anthony Bernard, of the University of California at Davis, whose doctoral dissertation is on the hippie movement; Joseph Rosenberg, a student at Hebrew Union College; Howard Erlanger, graduate student working on his doctorate at the University of California at Berkeley.

NEW YORK... The success that the neo-Nazi National Democratic Party (NPD) scored in early October in the elections in Bremen, when it won 8 seats in the Landtag (provincial Parliament), is causing serious concern among the major parties joined in the ruling West German coalition, according to a report just received by the AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE from Zachariah Shuster, its European Director.

"Responsible analysts within the government," he states, "admit that results of the Bremen elections demonstrate that in spite of the internal leadership clashes and splits within the NPD, the party has not lost its strength among the voters."

Mrs. Shuster's report is based on conversations with West German officials and others during a recent trip to Frankfurt and Bonn.

Mr. Shuster adds the explanation that the NPD has become the major outlet for all elements that, for one reason or another, are opposed to the present coalition government headed by Chancellor Kurt-Georg Kiesinger, of the Christian Democratic Union, and Vice Chancellor Willy Brandt, of the Socialist Party. Among the reasons given for the declining prestige of the coalition parties are these:

*Lack of results in the approaches made to Communist countries.

*Apprehension over the economic situation. "Although improved since the autumn of last year, it is still far from being as bright as a few years ago," Mr. Shuster says.

"A feeling that the Bundestag (Federal Parliament) is acting by itself, without close contact with public opinion.

"Increasing unrest among the new generation, "which finds that the major parties suffer from a lack of political direction."

Willy Brandt's Socialist party has been particularly concerned over the NPD success in Bremen since it was the chief loser, Mr. Shuster adds. A considerable number of votes for the NPD came from workers' and lower middle-class districts, traditional Socialist strongholds.

While the NPD is now represented in six provincial parliaments in West Germany, with a total of 48 deputies, Mr. Shuster points out that such local election successes do not necessarily forecast coming Federal success for the NPD. He quotes recent public opinion polls indicating that the NPD would get only 4 per cent of the votes if elections were held today for the Bundestag. "A more substantial sign of the general trend" may come out of the Baden-Wurtemberg Landtag elections set for April 1968, he adds.

Mr. Shuster also refers to "serious talk" in West Germany about changing the election laws to reduce the chance for minority parties like the NPD entering the

Dialogue Especially Apparent

KIAMESHA LAKE, N.Y. (WNS) -- An appeal to the United Nations to encourage direct Arab-Israeli peace talks and a warning against trying to force upon the parties concerned a formula for such talks, was approved by 3,000 delegates at the biennial convention here of the United Synagogue of America.

Henry N. Rapaport of Scarsdale, N.Y., re-elected president of the Conservative organization, stated that there should be no consideration of Israeli withdrawal from any of the occupied Arab territories until "direct deliberations" were in effect between the Arab and Israeli leaders.

In another resolution the delegates urged the Jews that the need for dialogue between Jews and Christians "has become especially apparent as a result of the recent Arab-Israeli conflict and the misunderstanding" among Christians.

KIWANIS PRESIDENT

Dr. James Jones, a devoted and dedicated civic leader, was elected President of Las Vegas Kiwanis. He will serve for the year 1968.

In his professional capacity he serves as President of Clark County Dental Society and Secretary of Nevada State Dental Authority.

Dr. Jones is a member of Las Vegas Housing Authority.

In his first attempt at political office, Dr. Jones was a candidate last year for Clark County Commissioner.
