

RISE OF NAZISM IN GERMANY DANGEROUS TREND FOR 1969 ELECTIONS

NEW YORK (WNS) Although the neo-Nazi Democratic Party in West Germany has gained only ten per cent of the votes in the recent elections in Baden-Wurttemberg, the development "cannot be dismissed as routine or as reflecting merely the normal percentage of extremist sentiment that may be found in any electorate."

This was the judgment of the situation by Dr. Joachim Prinz, an expert on German affairs who was among the first to alarm the world about the catastrophe awaiting the Jewish people under Hitler's domination of Germany. The former rabbi of Berlin and immediate past president of the American Jewish Congress said he viewed the election results as evidencing "a dangerous turn to the right among substantial segments of West German public opinion." He was particularly concerned that he neo-nazi gains occurred in Baden-Wurttemberg, a reputed liberal area in West Germany, declaring that if the National Democratic Party could make such gains now, there was reason to fear the results of the Federal elections in 1969.

Counseling German leaders that it might be wiser for them to occupy themselves less with Germany's public image and more with what the election says about the present condition of German moral and political life, Rabbi Prinz cautioned that "if a burgeoning of German neo-fascism and ultra-nationalism is to be contained, the present German Government and the liberal sections of the German people will have to do a much more vigorous, positive and searching job in advancing democratic doctrine and exposing the horrors of Nazism than they have troubled to do thus far."

In Bonn, Chancellor Kurt George Kiesinger said it was not true that nazism was re-emerging in Germany, adding that while he didn't want to minimize the danger inherent in the right-wing movement, he thought it "terrible oversimplification" to hold that the party's recent gains suggested the rebirth of Nazism in Germany.

A totally opposing view was taken by the president of the Central Council of Germany Jews, Hendrik Georg van Dam, who said the right-wingers were not neo-nazis but "Nazis in the old form". At the same time he took note of the fact that in the election campaign in Baden - Wurttemberg, National Democratic Party orators pinned the loss of World War II on "international Judaism."
