AMER. JEWISH COMMITTEE'S 62nd ANNUAL MEET

by MORTON YARMON

NEW YORK, Morris B. Abram, New York attorney who is U.S. Representative to the Human Rights Commission of the United Nations, was elected to his fifth term as President of the American Jewish Committee. The election of Mr. Abram and other national officers of the agency took place at the closing session of the Committee's 62nd Annual Meeting, held at the Americana Hotel.

NEW YORK, "If the deGaulle regime does survive, it will be so weakened that it will never again be the same," Raymond Aron said at a luncheon held in connection with the 62nd Annual Meeting of the American Jewish Committee. Mr. Aron, currently a professor at the beleaguered Sorbonne and the Institut des Sciences Politiques, has been a columnist since 1947 for the Paris newspaper Le Figaro, and is often called "the Walter Lippmann of France."

MIAMI, The American Jewish Congress called on the Johnson Administration to seek an agreement with Moscow on ending the Middle East arms race, and to arrange direct peace talks between Israel and the Arab states. The call came as the Congress concluded a six-day convention by re-electing Rabbi Arthur J. Lelyveld of Cleveland, Ohio, to a second two-year term as national president.

MIAMI, Protestant, Catholic and Jewish religious leaders were considering today a proposal by the American Jewish Congress that the armed forces replace military chaplains with civilian religious counselors wearing no uniforms and not subject to military discipline.

GROSSINGER'S, New York --- Following a call by its president, Dr. Abraham P. Gannes, urging "the making of Israel studies an integral part of Jewish education in the United States," 200 top Jewish educators and academicians in the fields of Hebrew and Jewish studies spent four days at the 42nd annual conference of the National Council for Jewish Education meeting here outlining a broad program of action and activities for the introduction of Israel studies into American religious schools.

WASHINGTON, -- B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations will establish a counselorship (part-time) program at Fairleigh-Dickinson University at Teaneck, N.J.

GREEN BAY (WNS) Meyer M. Cohen, a prominent Jewish lawyer and member of Knesset Israel Synagogue, has been named chairman of the St. Norbert College Board of Trustees, according to a report in the Wisconsin Jewish Chronicle which said this was the first time a Jew and a layman has been charged with top responsibility for the management, operation and control of the private school.

WASHINGTON (WNS) An effort to preserve an old Jewish landmark here was disclosed when the Jewish Historical Society of Washington announced that it had joined members of Adas Israel Synagogue in a campaign to halt the planned demolition of the eighty-eight-year-old synagogue structure, which has not been used by Jews for more than fifty years.

TEL AVIV (WNS) The West German national airline Lufthansa will begin regular service to Israel on November 1 under a Bonn-Israel aviation pact signed in Germany. Next for Germany. Next for negotiations is an agreement under which the Israeli El Al airline will be permitted to make stopovers at German airports.

TORONTO (WNS) The police of this city was sharply criticized by Douglas Fisher and Harry Crowe, widely syndicated columnists in the Canadian press, for protecting a local Nazi agitator in a public park here, the anti-Semite John Beattie. The protection, the columnists said, was tantamount to subsidizing nazism.

NEW YORK (WNS) Seven local progressive and left-wing Jewish fraternal and cultural organizations joined in common protest against the anti-Jewish campaign in Poland, terming the drive an "age-old maneuver to make the small remnant of Polish Jews the scapegoat in the present difficult situation."

JERUSALEM (WNS) Planned establishment of a center for Jewish education in the diaspora as part of its school of education and institute for contemporary history was announced here by the Hebrew University.

JERUSALEM (WNS) Formation of a "Zionist Council in Israel," whose stated aim is to promote "Zionist consciousness" in this country and bring to Israelis a wider awareness of Zionist accomplishments, was announced here at a founding meeting attended by more than 100 people, many of them prominent members of the government.

NEW YORK, Jews, who have tended to reject the concept of "the chosen people" during the past 100 years because of their drive to integrate into a more open society, appear ready to reaffirm this calling in the wake of the Nazi Holocaust and the founding of the State of Israel, Dr. Irving Greenberg of Yeshiva University said this morning.

Speaking at a closing-day session of the American Jewish Committee's 62nd Annual Meeting at the Americana Hotel, Dr. Greenberg, who also is Rabbi of Riverdale Jewish Center, said:

"Major historic events have always reshaped Jewish life. While the whole world are survivors of Auschwitz, it is particularly basic to Jews to reaffirm life at all costs."

"The key to Jewish existence," he continued, "has been the willingness to accept the obligations of chosenness. A new religious emphasis has emerged since the Holocaust. As a result, this generation of young American Jews is less self-conscious about its Judaism than were their parents. And it is less sentimental and more critical of the syna-

"While their parents practice a vicarious religion, manifested through communal activity and a limited synagogue attendance, this generation wishes to integrate religion into its life. These young people are less conventional and have fewer hang-ups about their identity as Jews than their parents.

"Unfortunately, the religious institutions, which are geared to the thinking of the 1930's, are unprepared for them. And because the young people are clearer about their identity, they will be less fearful of charges of double loyalty, which they will dismiss."

The Holocaust affected religion, Dr. Greenberg pointed out, by bringing about a greater concern for the survivors -- for human needs, with a de-emphasis on formal religious affirmations.

On another religious level, Dr. Greenberg added, he detects a new dialectic of faith and doubt as the events of the Nazi period are reexamined.

"On the other hand," he concluded, "while religious observance is becoming more profound, Jews are turning toward more secularity as a result of the existence of the State of Israel. Until now, Jews have been a people without power. Now they must face the dilemma of power -- its moral use and political reality."

prior to Dr. Greenberg's talk, a dramatic presentation of the late Morton Wishengrad's modern playlet on the Battle of the Warsaw ghetto was given. The playlet, featuring Arnold Moss, Marion Seldes, Leon Janney, Roger de Koven, Joseph Julian, Ralph Bell, Florence Stanley, and Scott Jacoby, was originally commissioned by the American Jewish Committee 25 years ago. Edward King served as director of the play.
