TELL TALES

cumstance back in 1957. We were working in an office on Madison Ave., in New York City, when a fellow worker wandered in with the pup, hardly a couple of weeks old. It had been left in a room at his hotel by two chorus girls who had skipped out, leaving all their belongings in deferment to rent that was due.

"You have a home, with a yard and grass, etc.," he addressed us, "and maybe you'd like to take a chance on this animal."

Well, we didn't know. We'd tried other pets before and invariably each became a burden on the little woman, who, at the time had her hands full with three vigorous, energetic youngsters. The Tell lads were a 24-hour occupation for her and anything else that required food and lodging, would be a chore.

But another look at the little ball of wool and a fiendish plot formed in our mind. We called home and informed our oldest youngster, Don, of our plan. He was delighted, but, like most youngsters, couldn't keep the secret from his mother.

So when we trudged home through the snow with the pup under our overcoat, she met us at the entrance to the dining room door.

"Out you go," she commanded with finality, "back to New York with that creature."

"Oh come on," we pleaded. "Give it a chance overnight. If you're not satisfied, we'll take it back."

That was all. By the next morning the dog was entrenched more firmly in our family, than us, the breadwinner. Within a few weeks each of us was entranced. Our middle son, Jay, at one time, wondered how our family ever got along before without Tanny. Our youngest, Mike, and the dog were inseparable.

For the first few months we didn't even know the gender of the pup. A dentist friend, who had some knowledge of anatomy, ventured that a tiny stump was not a tumor and therefore the dog was male. This determined us to decide on Tanny for a name, which stuck, when we were undecided between Tanny and Tammy. The breed we never knew, although dog fanciers said she was border terrier.

Years later when we acted as midwife for Tanny's offspring, all doubt of her femininity was removed, with regretful finality.

Tanny knew her place in the home and never once created a problem. She retired to her box at the merest suggestion. She never made herself comfortable on any of the chairs or couches. She waited respectfully for tidbits from the table and did not beg for handouts. She did not resort to a lap of her tongue as a sign of affection. Instead, she extended her paw or nuzzled her nose.

Tanny never unfurled her teeth at people, except those who, in jest, raised their hands in apparent harm to a member of our family. But Tanny was ferocious against any other animal that strayed on to our property. She would get wild in chasing even birds from our lawn. Never once did Tanny back away from the largest and most vicious dog in the neighborhood.

She was a perfect traveling companion. The newness of any environment was of no concern to her so long as she was with a member of our family. Her security in our company was manifest in every action. Our security with her was a source of extreme comfort.

Tanny's obedience was a main reason for our complete satisfaction with her. She had all the attributes of any well-mannered dog, like sitting up and rolling over. But Tanny had so much more. A command to "stop" was obeyed instantaneously, even with her snoot less than an inch away from a morsel of meat. She'd remain transfixed for any length of time, until the counter-command of "okay" before devouring the food. Tanny never left the sidewalk on her own. She'd jump from any height, on command, or out of a speeding boat, when she'd never been in the water before. A spring, and she'd be in our car through an open window, to take her place on front or rear seat.

But the most lovable characteristic was Tanny's enthusiasm. Every motion was made with every ounce of energy and with all the effort of her little dog heart. How could you feel low, when you had a friend displaying total confidence in your actions? Here was sincerity without qualification, a genuine respect that knew no brother.

So Tanny, with or without pedigree, whether she was mutt, mongrel or of royal breed, may she rest in peace. Here is one living creature, who played a small part in leaving a better world than she found, during her short sojourn on earth.

Of how many humans may the same be said?

LETTERS

Dear Helene:

A most gracious "hello" - after seeing the notice you gave me in the Israelite - I just had to sit down and say "many thanks." That mention you made about my weight made 4 more pounds melt away and now that I've achieved my goal - I feel as if I can do the "fandango" - so if Las Vegas needs an extra dancer - here I am! Kindest regards,
Fondly Blum'e

(Blum'e Bogg!)

P. S. Love your news items!

Dear Mr. and Mrs. Tell: I would like to use this opportunity to thank you for giving us the honor of being chosen for a Profile in your newspaper. We are deeply grateful and terribly flattered about the story Percy Villa wrote.

Please keep well, and again many thanks.

TEL AVIV (WNS) Dr. Nahum Goldmann, addressing a meeting of a club associated with the leftist Mapam party, declared he refused to succeed himself as president of the World Zionist Organization because he wanted to have the opportunity to talk freely about Israel's foreign policy.

TEL AVIV (WNS) Rabbi S. Gorin, Chief Chaplain of the Israeli armed forces, has been named Chief Askenazic Rabbi of Tel Aviv and Jaffa.

JERUSALEM (WNS) A child born in the hospital maternity ward in Beersheba last Thursday was named after the late Senator Robert F. Kennedy. The father, Saadya Yahhi, said the child was named Robert Kennedy Yarhi and that he invited U. S. Ambassador Walworth Barbour to attend the circumcision ceremony.

NEW YORK (WNS) Planting of trees in the John F. Kennedy Peace Forest in the Judean mountains south of Jerusalem in honor of late Senator Robert F. Kennedy was announced here by two major Jewish organizations. The Jewish National Fund said it would plant a forest of 500,000 trees in the area in memory of the slain Senator, and B'nai Zion, Zionist fraternal order, said it will plant a grove of 1,000 trees for the late senator in the John F. Kennedy Peace Forest.

DETROIT (WNS) The National Conference of Jewish Communal Service opened its 70th annual meeting here with a plea by Dr. Leonard J. Fein, political scientist with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, for a special relationship between American Jews and Negroes based on what he called "a common purpose" of "teaching America at long last what community and pluralism are all about."

PHILADELPHIA (WNS) The Jewish Publication Society at its annual meeting here re-elected Joseph M. First to his third presidential term.

Kovell Frontier Press Chief

HANK

Veteran Public Relations Consultant and Advertising Agency owner, L. Henry (Hank) Kovell has been appointed to the position of Publicity and Advertising Director for the Frontier Hotel, according to Henry Schwind, Managing Director for the Hughes-owned resort hotel. Schwind also advised that Kovell's ad firm, Kovell, Inc. had been renewed as advertising agency for the Frontier. Kovell, Inc. has been performing both publicity and advertising duties for the Frontier since before ground was broken for the new hotel.

Kovell, a twelve year Las Vegas resident, came to Las Vegas in 1956 as Publicity Director for the Fremont Hotel, a position he held for eight years. During his stint at the Fremont, he founded the Casino Center organization for which he was Coordinator for ten years. He was also director of publicity and advertising for the Horse shoe Hotel and Casino for a three year period while at the Fremont.

In May, 1964, Kovell opened his own firm, Kovell, Inc. for advertising and public relations and offices are now located at 530 E. Sahara Avenue.

Long active in civic and charitable undertakings, Kovell has served on the Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors, and was also Chairman of the Promotion Committee comprising of Public Relations directors of all resort hotels. In addition to his many charitable works, usually as publicist, he is a past charter president of the Downtown Optimist Club, currently a member of Las Vegas Rotary International, a director of the Boys Clubs of America, Clark County and a member of Oasis Lodge number 41 F & AM.
