

Yom Kippur

It's theme is prayer for forgiveness.

Over the year we sinned against God and man, and now we stand in expectation and in hope that our please will be heard and our wishes granted in the fullness of measure on the scale of judgment.

Yom Kippur, which is the Sabbath of Sabbaths because of its sublime sanctity, symbolizes rest.

It is a still day, a day when we whisper rather than talk, when we think rather than articulate, when we walk softly, hopefully in humility, and when we are with ourselves in aloneness. On that day we unburdened ourselves of the dark-nesses, the secrets and the sins which weighted us down during the year, and we are as if born again, at peace with man, God and the world.

Now only the judgment stands before us and the future. Yet we will be leaving the threshold of our sanctuaries in the faith that the decree will be diverted by repentance, prayer and charity.

Thus the essence of this day is faith and abiding hope, for without them we could not survive the storm and the turmoil to which we are now returning.

NEW YORK - A survey of business ownership in a 20 block area in the heart of Harlem shows that Negroes comprise nearly 60 per cent of all merchants in the area and that their share of the total is rising, the American Jewish Congress reported. The findings refute charges that Jews own most of the stores in the ghetto and are piling up profits at the expense of black residents.
