lined the two-mile long route from the Knesset, where Mr. Eshkol's body lay in state, to Mount Herzl and paid final tribute to the statesman who led Israel to its greatest military victory during the Six-Day War.

The Army's Chief Chaplain, Rabbi Shlomo Goren and Ashkenazic Chief Rabbi Isser Untermann delivered prayers at the funeral service. Sephardic Chief Rabbi Yitzhak Nissim performed the "keriah" ceremony -- the tearing of clothing of the nearest relatives.

Mr. Eshkol died of a heart attack at his official residence in Jerusalem where he had been recovering from an attack of influenza. He had suffered two heart attacks since 1965 and frequent illnesses in recent months had resulted in his delegation of some functions to his Cabinet colleagues. Mrs. Eshkol was at his side.

(The El Fatah terrorist organization claimed that Mr. Eshkol died of wounds suffered when terrorists shelled his residence in Degania Bet on Lake Tiberias two weeks ago. Israeli officials noted he had not been in Degania since the beginning of the month and called the Arab claim utter nonsense.)

The Cabinet held an urgent meeting at the Prime Minister's residence after his death and designated Deputy Prime Minister Yigal Allon as Acting Prime Minister for the next 30 days.

As Mr. Eshkol's death became known after an announcement on Kol Israel, the nation went into mourning for 30 days. Messages from world leaders, heads of Jewish organizations and the man in the street -- Jewish and non-Jewish -- poured into Israel.

The big question in Israel now is who will become Premier after the 30-day mourning period is over and lead the nation until the general elections in October. Mr. Eshkol had been able to keep the various factions in the Labor Party government united, but personal and political rivalries are now expected to result in a leadership struggle within the party.

Leading contenders are Mr. Allon, Minister Without Portfolio Pinhas Sapir, former Foreign Minister Golda Meir and Defense Minister Moshe Dayan.

Mr. Allon is the first sabra -- native-born Israel -- to hold the premiership. His temporary designation marks the possible end of an era in which members of the Second Aliya -- mainly pre World War I Russian immigrants -- held the top Government office. Mr. Allon, 51, was commander-in-chief of the Palmach and led the Hagana operations against the British Mandate. In the war of independence, 1947-49 he was in charge of a number of major campaigns. He served in the Nnesset and was appointed Minister of Labor in 1961 and Deputy Prime Minister in 1968.

Mr. Eshkol was born in the Kiev District of Russia, on October 25, 1895 and joined the Zionist movement while a student in Vilna. He came to Palestine in 1914 and worked on a number of villages. In World War I he served with the Jewish Legion. After the war he resumed his work on behalf of labor and participated in the founding of Mapai and Histadrut and served on party bodies.

He served in positions concerned with Jewish rescue work, internal security and defense and agricultural settlement for the various agencies that evolved into the Government when the State of Israel was founded. After the establishment of Israel he became involved in the State's financial affairs and fund-raising activities among the Jews in the Diaspora. In 1951 he was appointed Minister of Agriculture and Development and a year later assumed the post of Minister of Finance. He succeeded David Ben-Gurion as Prime Minister in 1963 and served uninterrupted in that post until his death. He is survived by his second wife and four children from his first marriage.
