

Barney Glazer's "HOLLYWOOD HOTLINE"

What does a Hollywood reporter think of when he has a desire to express his own opinions instead of listening to celebrities propound theirs? He may not emerge as another Mark Twain or Will Rogers but somewhere among his thoughts something may come into focus and make sense, and so a man talks to himself.

Ever since the Hong Kong flu launched its epidemic, motion picture attendance has slumped badly. When you have the flu, who feels like necking?

Too more celebrities are preparing legal action against fan magazines for publishing fabrications about their personal lives. I feel the same way about my friends. Half the lies they tell about me aren't true.

"Isadora" failed to attract anticipated crowds to its hard-ticket roadshows, so Universal Studios quickly booked it into more intimate, or "arty" theatres. The trouble with an artistic movie about a girl who dances with veils is that too frequently the veils wind up outnumbering the ticket buyers.

Whoever was responsible for canceling the N. Y. Copacabana's chorus line of six girls has to go down in showbiz history as the biggest rascal on 12 legs.

Lucille Ball and Jackie Gleason may costar in the film "Diamond Lil." That's just what the boxoffice needs; a pair of old socks.

The possibility of the Beatles going bankrupt frightens me. I just can't visualize them cutting one another's hair.

Asked how it felt when a lion bit his wrist, Jack Paar replied, "Well, if you've ever been bitten by a mosquito, it wasn't quite the same."

Paar denied he had been frightened but admitted that if the lion had said, "Pass the salt," he might have become deeply concerned.

The Saturday Evening Post has stopped printing but old magazines never die. They fold up.

Now that we're getting the irritants out of cigarettes, let's work on tv commercials.

We are reminded constantly that the horse is practically extinct but look about you and note that so are the persons who used to work like one.

In New York, an apartment house owner is known by the temperature he keeps.

I'm not sure how some studio employees hold their jobs but it's time that they started a do-it-yourself movement for thinking.

in "Hair": Don't get absent minded and wald out of the Aquarius Theatre on Sunset Boulevard without dressing. If you do, the Hollywood police will pick you up and hold you for observation.

How in the world did our mothers ever survive rainy Saturdays with house full of kids and no television set?

Young couples are getting married younger and younger. When the bridegroom says, "With all my worldly goods, I thee endow," that means the bride gets his baseball mitt.

Exam questions in our colleges are the same every year. The answers are different.

When the mini-skirt meets the low-cut gown, that will be the meeting of a man's mind. Hollywood has made so many boring airplane movies, why not equip every theatre chair with seat belts?

Nobody falls asleep while setting on a buckle.
