LEADERS DIFFER ON BORDERS

TEL AVIV (WNS) -- A Dayan, was a controversial pledge by Premier Golda Meir that even if the opportunity for peace in the Mid-east arose, Israel will not "forgo one inch of land if it means endangering our security border" failed to lessen the differences between Israeli leaders over the future of the occupied Arab lands.

These differences were evident at the Israel Labor Party convention which ended without approving key platform planks dealing with security, foreign policy and policy toward the occupied Arab territories. Those planks were referred to the party's central committee which was empowered to make a final decision. The left-wing Mapam party, which has entered into a political alignment with the Labor Party, followed an identical course at its own convention.

The plank on Israel's security frontiers, proposed by Defense Minister Moshe

But Foreign Minister Abba Eban and other leading Party members feared that such a plank might impair Israel's image as a peace-seeking nation and harm prospects for eventual peace negotiations.

JERUSALEM, -- 66 Benei Metzvah from the U. S. were called up to the Torah at Jerusalem's Yeshurun Central Synagogue in the largest ceremony of its kind held so far in Israel.

JERUSALEM: -- The ninth Israel Festival opened with a new production called "My Jerusalem" in the 2,000 year old Citadel of the Old City. The Speaker of the Knesset, the Mayor of Jerusalem and cabinet members joined tourists and vacationing Israelis in watching the revue that presents snatches of life from the past hundred years of the city's history.
