Observers noted that both sides had now modified their position on the groundwork for negotiations and were in general agreement on the physical conditions for the talks and perhaps some efforts would actually begin before the end of the year.

The Cairo spokesman who reported the latest Egyptian peace offer declared that the Rhodes formula could be used as a way to reach a settlement but he emphasized that this approach had never been "and cannot be considered under any circumstances as direct talks." He declared that "it would be acceptable to us if it is not constructed as direct negotiations."

Both Israel and the Arabs have differed on what actually happened during the armistice talks on Rhodes under the mediation of Dr. Ralph Bunche. Both sides were housed in a hotel with Dr. Bunche. The Egyptians claim that all talks were carried out indirectly through him and that there never was direct contact with the Israelis. Israel admits that Dr. Bunche shuttled between the rooms of the two delegates but insists that there were several direct contacts. U. N. documents under Dr. Bunche's name indicate that both parties were together in the same room on several occasions.

Egyptian spokesmen said they viewed Dr. Jarring's mission as falling within the Rhodes formula.

But Israeli leaders said his mission was not that of mediation but an effort to bring both sides together for peace talks and that Israel would not agree.

Defense Minister Moshe Dayan told a student audience in Tel Aviv that Rhodes-type talks did not deviate from the principle of direct negotiations. But he warned that the UN must not be given any functional role in settling the conflict such as setting up demilitarized zones.
