

Barney Glazer's 'HOLLYWOOD HOTLINE'

Continuing their magillah-guerrilla warfare against tv's trite, producers Saul Ison and Ernie Chambers plan a Yiddish version of "Hee Haw," to be titled, with ethnical ramification, "Who Ha." Putting class in their classic, the producers may hire Mickey Katz and Molly Picon as co-hosts. One can't get much closer to the roots.

Charlie Pomerantz, Hollywood's personable press agent who doesn't need a mustache, sideburns and beard to influence and make friends, adheres to a promise he made many years ago, "If anyone ever catches Dinah Shore losing her temper in public, I'll pay that person $5,000". . . If you can't catch Dinah building up a head of steam, maybe you can catch bandleader Manny Harmon without a white carnation. If you do, he'll pay you $50. Me? I'm trying to catch Manny in the shower.

Did you hear about the family who wanted to give their 13-year-old the best Bar Mitzvah any kid ever had? They took him on a four-day cruise. They were out three days when they remembered they had left him on the pier.

Remember the opening segment of tv's "Room 222," where a young Negro attended a certain high school because he wanted to study Hebrew? It was based on a true story involving Morris Buchanan, a Negro actor in "Peyton Place," whose son attended Fairfax High School, only public L.A. high school with a Hebrew class.

Arthur Lubin, a Jew, will direct Father Humberto Almazan in the movie, "Rain for a Dusty Summer." Army Archerd reports that when Lubin asked the priest, "How does it feel to have a Jewish boy directing you," Father Almazan replied, "Wonderful. Now, I have two Jewish boys."

What was the three-letter word blipped out of the Joey Bishop Show when Anthony Newley repeated a Buddy Hackett remark? Answer: an onager . . . In Hawaii, Jack Benny went shopping with agent Bobby Burns and bought loads of gifts for the Benny grandkids.

Harry Belafonte's Jewish wife looks darker each time I see her; much darker than she could possibly get from the sun. Is she using a lotion purposely to make herself look black?

Inflation has messed us up. It's no longer worthwhile marrying for money. . . Make your friends remember you this year. Buy them something cheap for Chanuka. . . Connie Stevens won't buy a General Motors car. She doesn't want another body by Fisher.

Sign on a Hollywood Boulevard shop, "Ladies Ready-to-Wear Dresses." Well!

About time. . . An English general claimed that Laine Kazan's shape is as passe as World War I's ammunition. Okeh, general. Passe the ammunition.

Dustin Hoffman never says he's short. He calls himself "a stump of a man"
