

Barney Glazer's 'HOLLYWOOD HOTLINE'

Elliott Gould is even more outspoken than his estranged wife, Barbra Streisand. He admits he wants to become a director and have things his own way. Barbra never admitted she wanted to become a director but in her movies she frequently took over.

The Goulds' marital status continues to remain in limbo. They're not reconciled. Neither have they planned a divorce. As a matter of fact, they appear to be much friendlier apart than they were while living together.

EDWARD G. ROBINSON has to be Hollywood's bridge for the generation gap. Whenever Robinson appears in public, kids mob him for his autograph.

AFTER LOSING one can of sound for "Toral Toral" (no, my kynd, this is not a picture about a synagogue), 20th-Fox rushed in comedian-impressionist Dave Barry, who dubbed the voices of all six stars! Now, there's a big mou... for you.

EVERYWHERE that Tony Curtis goes, his wife, Leslie, goes. She says it's insurance against those long separations that apparently caused Tony's marital failures.

NOW IT CAN BE TOLD how All MacGraw and Producer Stanley Jaffe got together for her selection as the Jewish femme lead in "Goodbye, Columbus." They met in January, 1968. Said Jaffe, "It's a shame you're not Jewish. You'd be perfect for the role of Brenda."

In May, Jaffe told All he was taking four girls to Hollywood to test for the role. A few weeks later, he phoned and asked her to drop over and improvise with some of the candidates for the male lead. She did.

On her return from a trip to Florida, All received a phone call. It was Jaffe. He said the magic words, "Is Brenda Patinkin there?"

Even more interesting would be the account of how All gave up her boy friend. As recently as the press preview of "Goodbye," All was engaged to marry a young N.Y. actor. Shortly after the film's release, she was married to Bob Evans, handsome, young head of Paramount Pictures.

There's a moral in there someplace--something like: If you're engaged to a beautiful, talented young actress, make sure the studio doesn't have a handsome, young, eligible bachelor in a top exec position before you permit your girl friend to accept a role in that studio.

JACK BENNY extends all persons over 60 this formula for health and happiness: "Don't retire. Working keeps you young. I especially like to work with young people."

Referring to Groucho Marx' recent divorce by his wife, Eden, Benny remarked, "Groucho doesn't work anymore. When anyone stops working, that's when the trouble starts."

BAR MITZVAHS are getting different all the time. Perhaps you can recite chapter and verse from this mod age and relate your version of the most way-out Bar Mitzvah and its subsequent celebration.

No doubt you can recall Bar Mitzvahs in Hawaii, Miami and even Israel. My niece planed her son, Jamie, for example, to Israel, where he was Bar Mitzvahed at Jerusalem's famed Walling Wall.

I wonder: which lucky Jewish boy, probably still unborn, will become the first to be Bar Mitzvahed on the moon.
