NEW YORK -- Jews may in time lose their leading position in New York's fashion industry both because of an increase in public ownership of Seventh Avenue companies and because of the entry of Blacks and Puerto Ricans into the trade, a noted fashion consultant told a New York radio audience.

Speaking on the WNYC "New York Tomorrow" Program, Betty Yarman, fashion consultant and author of the syndicated "Family Finance" women's column, declared that the ethnic trend in the fashion world could lead to fewer Jews in management roles. This trend, toward more Blacks and Puerto Ricans in the industry, she continued, is healthy for New York City.
