Secretary General U Thant and a scheduled dinner of the Franco-American societies.

A Washington spokesman said, President Nixon would make an unscheduled appearance at the dinner in what was considered as an attempt to mollify the French leader who had expressed his anger at the demonstrations against his nation's Mideast policy and specifically the decision to continue to embargo Mirage jets to Israel while selling more than 100 of these planes to Libya.

Israeli leaders were reported to be very displeased over the anti-Pompidou demonstrations, fearing that they will turn France against Jerusalem, specifically in the economic area. Israel has been negotiating with the Common Market over preferred trade terms and French agreement to this is a must, it was noted. These talks have been going well but they could encounter difficulty if Paris wanted to react against Jerusalem for the American demonstrations.

French newspapers so far have directed their anger over the demonstration against President Pompidou, not the United States. The attitude expressed in editorials and headlines was that Mr. Pompidou was not acting like a leader in expressing anger at citizens exercising their right of protest.

The demonstrations have sprung up in every city in which the French President has made an appearance. It reached a high point in Chicago where some 10,000 people turned out Saturday night. Mr. Pompidou saw this turnout as "evidently, some demonstration carefully organized in order to permit them to close in on me. I feel that these demonstrations are a stain on the forehead of America and that they are having their own cause and will not hurt French-American friendship, which is above bad manners."

Mr. Pompidou did meet with Jewish leaders in Chicago and he told them that "it was in the interest of Israel to become a state in the geographical sense like all other states and that as long as Israel continued to be a religion state, it would be surrounded by hostile people"

French spokesmen went out of their way to declare that neither France nor the French Government nor the French president was anti-Semitic and that current French policy was not affected by religious considerations.

American Jewish leaders attempted to cool the demonstrations in New York. The crowds were numerous but well behaved for the most part. Newsmen and police officers noted that this was the case with the demonstrators who greeted Mr. Pompidou in his stops in a number of cities.
