NON-ORTHODOX CONVERSIONS

NEW YORK (WNS) — The Israeli government was urged by the Rabbinical Council of America (Orthodox) not to submit to "pressure" from non-Orthodox Jewish groups in the United States and Israel who are seeking recognition of non-Orthodox conversions to Judaism. Rabbi Bernard L. Berzon, the newly elected president of the RCA said "such diluted conversion distort Jewish law and undermine the unity of the Jewish people." He said that tampering with the Halacha laws concerning conversions to sanction such "tenuous conversions is to accelerate the assimilationist process which has already reached alarming proportions." Rabbi Berson expressed dissatisfaction with Israel's Law of Return which defines a Jew as a person born of a Jewish mother or converted to Judaism because it didn't limit conversions to those performed only by Orthodox rabbis in accordance with Halacha. He called conversions performed by non-Orthodox rabbis "invalid."

(In Amsterdam, the World Union of Progressive Judaism (Reform) called on the Israeli government to accord Reform and Liberal Judaism the same rights as the Orthodox. The organizations outgoing president, Rabbi Jacob Shankman of New York, and Rabbi Ezra Spicandler, director of the Hebrew Union College's Archeological Institute in Jerusalem, scorned Israel's religious non-recognition of her non-Orthodox communities.)

The Rates You Raise ... May Be Your Own

Automobile insurance rates are going up again — and we don't like it any more than you do. But as long as more claims come in, rates will continue to climb.

So we ask PLEASE take it easy. Watch out for other drivers, and even if you are in a hurry, being a minute late is better than a wrecked car and an injured family. Please drive carefully.
