AJ COMMITTEE, CONGRESS CENSURED BY AGUDATH

CHICAGO, ILL. --A strongly worded censure of the American Jewish Congress and the American Jewish Committee was adopted at the Midwest Convention of Agudath Israel of America, charging these groups with "smearing the Yeshivos before America's highest legal tribunal". The charge was levelled on the basis of an amicus curiae brief recently submitted by the American Jewish Congress and several other non-Orthodox groups to the U.S. Supreme Court on a pending case testing the constitutionality of the Pennsylvania state law which reimburses religious schools for expenses incurred in the teaching of certain secular subjects. According to Agudath Israel, the brief submitted by these groups bolsters its argument that these religious schools which benefit from the Pennsylvania funds must be denied funds because they are "racially segregated", with the following statement: "There are very few Negro Jews, as a result of which the Jewish day schools are virtually a hundred percent white".

The Convention resolution, which was adopted after an address by Rabbi Moshe Sherer, executive president of Agudath Israel of America, states that "the non-Orthodox groups, spearheaded by the American Jewish Congress, have regrettably stooped to a new low in their unrelenting fight against government support for Yeshivos. To use the Jewish day schools as an example of racially-segregated institutions, even by implication, is a desecration of the Jewish religion taught in these schools-- a religion which first proclaimed to the world the equality of all men". The resolution concluded with an appeal to the "grass-roots members" of the American Jewish Congress and American Jewish Com-professionals in their desperation to stem the tide of growing public approval of government aid for non-public schools".
