DAYAN: SADAT THREAT SERIOUS

TEL AVIV (WNS)-- Defense Minister Moshe Dayan declared in a televised interview that Israelis should take "very seriously indeed" Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's recent threat of launching war against Israel before the end of this year. Stating that Sadat had already established a "record" of "shifting ultimatums," he argued that "in this case I think his threats should be taken seriously."

Gen. Dayan said he believed Sadat felt that if developments, such as those involving U.S.-sponsored efforts for an interim agreement on re-opening the Suez Canal, did not move in his direction politically, he would have to "take to arms" and whether it would be at Christmas time or a month before was "immaterial." He added that despite the inflow of Soviet weapons to Egypt, he was certain Israel would win if Sadat carried out his threat.

Dayan also suggested in the interview that Israel should give lenient treatment to some 100 Palestinian commandoes who fled to Israel from Jordan during King Hussein's crackdown on Arab Terrorists. He said that in some cases, he thought certain guerrillas should be freed by Israel, adding that while the Israeli Government will decide the fate of the surrendering guerrillas, each case should be considered on its merits.

Commenting on Sadat's latest threats, Israeli sources said that Egypt had been greatly strengthened for a new war, if and when the Egyptian leaders felt they could win. The Egyptian army has been undergoing a continuous expansion, backed by a substantial air force supported by Soviet-piloted Air Force units and by a continual flow of supplies and materials including amphibious vehicles for a Canal cross-over, they said.
