

KOSYGIN: NO VISAS UNTIL MIDEAST PEACE

OTTAWA (WNS) -- Visiting Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin told a closed Parliamentary session that no substantial emigration of Soviet Jews to Israel would be permitted until peace came to the Middle East.

In response to questions by MP's regarding conditions of Jews in the USSR and his government's policy towards them, Kosygin said, "There are no restrictions to emigration except one. Israel is occupying Arab lands and there will be no peace in the Middle East until Israel withdraws to its original boundaries. We don't want to supply soldiers to Israel's Army."

Kosygin defended the Soviet government's treatment of minorities and added "there are dissidents in every country. We can send you some."

He said he knew of no cases or names of Jews who had been imprisoned and said he couldn't personally undertake to free a particular individual sentenced by the courts. Denying there was suppression of Jewish cultural rights in the USSR, Kosygin said the Jews constituted 9 percent of the Soviet population, but there are nine times as many Jews with higher education than other Russians and 17 times as many as other national groups.

Kosygin has been picketed by Jewish groups since his arrival in Canada and was physically attacked by a Hungarian refugee.

resistance fighters, ghetto fighters and concentration camp survivors. Eban was attacked in editorials published in the influential English language publication, The Jerusalem Post which often reflects government views. The editorial said his statement would be used by "reluctant prosecutors in Germany and Austria" and it will be said that "even Israel favors abandoning all further prosecution."

Eban was also criticized by the Hebrew language dailies Haaretz and Davar.

On his return to Israel, Eban said it was "evil" the way his remarks were distorted.
