

AMERICAN JEWRY SURVIVAL DEPENDS ON MAKING DEMOCRACY WORK

HONESDALE, PA., -- An American Jewish youth leader warned here that "the Jewish community could ill afford the politics of violence or the madness of the street confrontation."

Steven Windmueller, program specialist for campus and youth of the American Jewish Committee's Jewish Communal Affairs Department, speaking at the annual conference of the North American Jewish Youth Council being held at Camp Moshava here, took issue with the tactics of extremists of both Left and Right who despair of democracy's solving its problems peacefully.

Mr. Windmueller insisted that the survival of American Jewry depended on making democracy work so that minority group members, Black, Jewish and others, "can process their grievances within a legitimate and open political system."

He warned that irresponsible attacks on Jewish institutions in America may leave a legacy of a weakened Jewish community. Jewish continuity and Jewish security, he continued, may not survive "political extremism, social faddism and nihilism, and cultural authoritarianism," he declared.

Mr. Windmueller called for Jewish communal institutions to "adjust their services and priorities to the upgrading of a quality of life for American Jewry."

Founded in 1906, the American Jewish Committee is this country's pioneer human relations organization. It combats bigotry, protects the civil and religious rights of people at home and abroad, and seeks improved human relations for all men.
