

20,000 SAY "LET MY PEOPLE GO"

NEW YORK (WNS) --Some 20,000 Jews gathered at Madison Square Garden on the second night of Chanukah in a Freedom Lights for Soviet Jewry rally to demand that the Soviet Union let its three million Jews leave. The rally was sponsored by the Greater New York Conference on Soviet Jews and the Center for Russian Jewry.

Senator Henry M. Jackson (D., Wash.), charged Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin was "lying" when he termed Soviet persecution of Jews a "myth." "If Kosygin is right, it would follow that he would be willing to remove all restrictions on Jewish immigration --for what has he to fear?" Jackson asked. He noted that "too many people" in America urge "that we must not press too hard on the issue of Russian Jewry for fear of hurting our relations with the Soviet Union." This happened in the past, he said, "in the thirties with regard to the Nazis. We listened to the counsels of expediency and ignored the cries for help. We must never repeat that mistake."

Ford (R., Mich.), the House Minority Leader, said he would "strongly recommend" to President Nixon that during his visit to Moscow next May he make it clear to the Kremlin how Americans feel about the oppression of Soviet Jews.

Mrs. Ruth Aleksandrovich Averbuch, expressed her gratitude to "all of you and all those who helped in getting me out of the Soviet Union" and added "While I am free, my heart is still with our imprisoned brothers and sisters." Rabbi Klapperman, chairman of the New York Conference on Soviet Jewry, asserted "We have come here tonight to declare our concern for the welfare of the three million Jews in the Soviet Union and our identification with their faith... They stretch out their hands to us and cry 'do not forget us,' and this enormous gathering pledges itself we will not forget them."
