

NIXON ACCUSES USSR
Soviet pilots, 5,000 missile crew members and technicians and about 11,000 other advisors." He also said that Soviet personnel were "directly involved" in violations of standstill cease-fire agreement of Aug. 7, 1970.

He underlined the importance he placed on achieving peace in the Middle East by stating that "a discussion of the problem of the Middle East and the reasons for the failure to reach a peaceful settlement there," will be second on the agenda of his visit to Moscow in May, only to achieving a settlement on strategic arms limitations.

The President revealed that the "search for an overall Arab-Israel settlement will continue under Ambassador (Gunnar V.) Jarring's auspices" and that "our efforts to help the parties achieve an interim agreement will also continue, as long as the parties wish." He noted that "maintaining the military balance is not by itself a policy which can bring peace," and added that the military balance must be maintained so that an imbalance would not tempt one side to seek an easy victory or panic the other into a move of desperation."

In this respect, Pres. Nixon stated, when, because of the Soviet-Egyptian cease-fire violations, "Israel refused to negotiate until the violations were rectified," the U.S. "provided Israel with means to cope with this situation, he said. Since that time, he added, the Soviets introduced more missiles and "advanced" aircraft, but the report did not describe present Soviet strength in Egypt. Dr. Henry Kissinger, the President's advisor on national security affairs, said the report was designed to explain to "the American people and to other countries what we think of international affairs." He said the U.S. viewed the Middle East situation from the perspective of "the local rivalries and the great confrontations that may be involved" and added that it was U.S. policy to see that "neither side gets a unilateral advantage."

Kissinger said that a "solution of the tensions in the Middle East must take account of the presence of outside forces," a reference to Soviet deployment in Egypt and the Eastern

NEW DEMOCRATIC CLUB MEANS PARTY UNITY AT LAST

By JACK TELL

Unity of Democrats in Clark County is assured with the formation of Community Democratic Club, with more than 300 members at the outset and growing rapidly.

All precincts are represented and all registered Democrats, especially the new 18 to 21 voters, are encouraged to join. At the installation dinner the past weekend, attended by more than 200, including many notables, enthusiasm ran high, indicating harmony among those with the same political views.

Las Vegas City Commissioner Hank Thornley was the amiable Master of Ceremonies and Justice of Peace Robert Reid spoke on welfare and the young, new voters. U.S. Senator Howard Cannon, who had just returned from Europe, welcomed the new club. Former Gov. Grant Sawyer installed Jim T. Fletcher as president; Guy Frederickson, first vice president; Angelo Scalo, second vice president; Everett Jordan, secretary; Abe Steinhouse, treasurer; and Raymond See, Norman Brotman and James Brooklier, directors.

Also among those in attendance were State Senator Floyd Lamb, former City Commissioner Wes Howerly, Pres. of So. Nev. Citizens Crime Commission Joseph Kadans, David Canter of the Clark County School Board, former U. S. Attorney John W. Bonner and George Rhodine, Head of Community Relations for Hughes Nevada Properties.
