

HADASSAH IN ISRAEL PERFORMS SUCCESSFUL KIDNEY TRANSPLANT

JERUSALEM -- Two brothers came from Teheran, Iran to the Hadassah-Hebrew University Medical Center here to have a kidney transplant performed, whereby Edward Sarkissian, an engineer aged 30, donated a kidney to his older brother Andronik, a clerk aged 34, who was in a critical condition due to renal failure. The operation, performed by Dr. Arie Durst, leading a team of six surgeons, was a complete success.

The two brothers had wandered around Europe from one hospital to another in search of a surgeon prepared to do the operation. As this involved the use of a dialysis unit -- and there is an acute shortage of these everywhere -- the brothers met with refusal everywhere. On their way back to Iran they came through Israel, and a friend now settled in Israel suggested that they should try Hadassah. The brothers are not Jewish.

Dr. Durst, who had his specialist training in organ transplantation at the University of Colorado, had just set up an organ transplant unit at Hadassah. The patient was immediately put on to dialysis in preparation for the operation, and the Department of Immunohematology examined the brothers for blood groups and tissue types and advised favorably on the transplant.

Before returning to Teheran, Andronik said: "I feel marvelous! I was dying and now I am going home a new man with years of productive life ahead of me. I thank God for prompting me to stop in Israel, and I thank Hadassah and its staff for what they have done for me."
